Ostwald /ˈostvælt/, Friedrich Wilhelm (1853–1932), German physical chemist. He did much to establish physical chemistry as a separate discipline, and is particularly remembered for his pioneering work on catalysis. He also worked on chemical affinities, the hydrolysis of esters, and electrolytic conductivity and dissociation. After retiring, Ostwald studied colour science, and developed a new quantitative colour theory. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1909.

Oswald /ˈɒzwəld/, Lee Harvey (1939–63), American alleged assassin of John F. Kennedy. In Nov. 1963 he was arrested in Dallas, Texas shortly after the assassination of President Kennedy and charged with his murder. He denied the charge, but was murdered by Jack Ruby (1911–67), a Dallas nightclub owner, before he could be brought to trial. Oswald was said to be the sole gunman by the Warren Commission (1964), but the House of Representatives Assassinations Committee (1979) concluded that more than one gunman had been involved; the affair remains the focus for a number of conspiracy theories.

Oswald of York, St /ˈɒzwəld/ (d.992), English prelate and Benedictine monk. He rose first to become bishop of Worcester and then Archbishop of York. He founded several Benedictine monasteries and, along with St Dunstan, was responsible for the revival of the Church and of learning in 10th-century England. Feast day, 28 Feb.

Ottoman Empire the Turkish empire, established in northern Anatolia by Osman I at the end of the 13th century and expanded by his successors to include all of Asia Minor and much of SE Europe. Ottoman power received a severe check with the invasion of the Mongol ruler Tamerlane in 1402, but expansion resumed several decades later, resulting in the capture of Constantinople in 1453. The empire reached its zenith under Suleiman in the mid-16th century, dominating the eastern Mediterranean and threatening central Europe, but thereafter it began to decline. Still powerful in the 17th century, it had greatly declined by the 19th century, eventually collapsing after the First World War.

Ovid /ˈɒvɪd/ (full name Publius Ovidius Naso) (43 BC–AD c. 17), Roman poet. He was a major poet of the Augustan period, particularly known for his elegiac love-poems (such as the Amores and the Ars Amatoria) and for the Metamorphoses, a hexametric epic which retells Greek and Roman myths in roughly chronological order. His irreverent attitudes offended Augustus and in AD 8 he was exiled to Tomis (modern Constanța) on the Black Sea, where he continued to write elegiac poems describing his plight; these are collected in the Tristia.

[OE āgan (see OUGHT^{1}) f. Gmc]

Owen^{1} /'əʊɪn/, David (Anthony Llewellyn), Baron Owen of the City of Plymouth (b.1938), British politician. After serving as Foreign Secretary (1977–9) in the Labour government, he became increasingly dissatisfied with the Labour Party's policies, and in 1981 broke away to become a founding member of the Social Democratic Party (SDP) (see also GANG OF FOUR 2). He led the SDP from 1983 to 1987, resigning to form a breakaway SDP when the main party decided to merge with the Liberals; he eventually disbanded this party in 1990. In 1992 he was appointed the EC's chief mediator in attempts to solve the crisis in the former Yugoslavia.

Owen^{2} /'əʊɪn/, Sir Richard (1804–92), English anatomist and palaeontologist. A qualified surgeon, Owen was superintendent of natural history at the British Museum for 28 years and planned the new Natural History Museum in South Kensington. He made important contributions to the evolution and taxonomy of monotremes and marsupials, flightless birds, and fossil reptiles, and coined the word dinosaur in 1841. Owen is chiefly remembered for his opposition to Darwinism and to its defender T. H. Huxley, because he did not accept that natural selection was sufficient to explain evolution.

Owen^{3} /'əʊɪn/, Robert (1771–1858), Welsh social reformer and industrialist. A pioneer socialist thinker, he believed that character is a product of the social environment. He founded a model industrial community centred on his cotton mills at New Lanark in Scotland; this was organized on principles of mutual cooperation, with improved working conditions and housing together with educational institutions provided for workers and their families. He went on to found a series of other cooperative communities; although these did not always succeed, his ideas had an important long-term effect on the development of British socialist thought and on the practice of industrial relations.

Owen^{4} /'əʊɪn/, Wilfred (1893–1918), English poet. He fought in the First World War and his experiences inspired his best-known works, most of which he wrote after a meeting with Siegfried Sassoon in 1917. Only five of Owen's poems appeared in his lifetime and his reputation has grown following editions of his poems by Sassoon in 1920 and Edmund Blunden in 1931; among the most famous are 'Strange Meeting' and 'Anthem for Doomed Youth'. Owen's poetry is characterized by its bleak realism, its indignation at the horrors of war, and its pity for the victims — of whom he became one, killed in action in the last hours of the war.

Owens /'əʊɪnz/, Jesse (born James Cleveland Owens) (1913–80), American athlete. In 1935 he equalled or broke six world records in 45 minutes, and in 1936 won four gold medals (100 and 200 metres, long jump, and 4 × 100 metres relay) at the Olympic Games in Berlin. The success in Berlin of Owens, as a black man, outraged Hitler, who was conspicuously absent when Owens's medals were presented.

owing /'əʊɪŋ/ predic.adj. 1 owed; yet to be paid (the balance owing). 2 (foll. by to) a caused by; attributable to (the cancellation was owing to ill health). b (as prep.) because of (trains are delayed owing to bad weather).

owl /aʊl/ n. 1 a nocturnal bird of prey of the order Strigiformes, with large eyes and a hooked beak. (See note below.) 2 colloq. a person compared to an owl, esp. in looking solemn or wise. □ owl-light dusk, twilight. owl-monkey (pl. -eys) = DOUROUCOULI. □ owlery n. (pl. -ies). owlish adj. owlishly adv. owlishness n. (in sense 2). owl-like adj. [OE ūle f. Gmc]

- The owls belong to two families, Tytonidae (barn owls and their relatives) and Strigidae (tawny owls, eagle owls, snowy owls, little owls, etc.). They have a number of adaptations for hunting at night, with large forward-facing eyes, a prominent facial disc, a highly acute hearing, and silent flight. Owls appear to have a large head, short neck, and small beak, but a thick layer of soft feathers hides the real shape — the neck is unusually flexible, and the gape is large enough to swallow prey whole. Their calls are often highly distinctive.

owlet /'aʊlɪt/ n. 1 a young owl. 2 a small owl, esp. of the genus Glaucidium, Xenoglaux, or Athene.

Oxford English Dictionary (abbr. OED) the largest dictionary of the English language, prepared in Oxford and originally issued in instalments between 1884 and 1928 under the title A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles (NED). It was published under the present title in twelve volumes with a supplement in 1933. Based on historical principles, it was edited until his death in 1915 by Sir James Murray. Preparation for the dictionary was begun by the Philological Society of London in 1857, and editorial work (originally for a four-volume dictionary, to be completed in ten years) started in earnest in 1879 under an agreement with Oxford University Press. A second edition, incorporating post-1933 supplements edited by Robert Burchfield (b.1923), was published in 1989, and a third edition is being prepared.

Oxford Group a Christian movement founded at Oxford in 1921, with discussion of personal problems by groups. Also called Moral Re-Armament.

Oxford Movement a Christian movement (*c.*1833–45) based at Oxford and led by John Keble, John Henry Newman, and Edward Pusey, which aimed at restoring traditional Catholic teaching within the Church of England; its principles were set out in a series of pamphlets (1833–41) called Tracts for the Times (hence an alternative name Tractarianism). The Movement emphasized ceremonial, set up the first Anglican religious communities, and contributed to social work and scholarship. At first it met with much hostility, but it eventually had a profound effect on the Anglican Church, forming the basis for the development of Anglo-Catholicism.

Oxfordshire /'oksfəd,ʃɪə(r)/ a county of south central England; county town, Oxford.

Oxford University the oldest English university, established at Oxford soon after 1167, perhaps as a result of a migration of students from Paris. - Oxygen forms about 20 per cent of the earth's atmosphere, and was discovered by Joseph Priestley in 1774 (see also PHLOGISTON). It is the most abundant element in the earth's crust, mainly in the form of oxides, silicates, and carbonates; water is a compound of oxygen and hydrogen. Oxygen is essential to plant and animal life and is a constituent of most organic compounds. The processes of respiration and combustion involve the ability of oxygen to combine readily with other elements. Industrially, pure oxygen is obtained by distillation of liquefied air; it is used in the steel-making and chemical industries, and in medicine. Although oxygen usually consists of diatomic molecules, a triatomic form, ozone, is an important component of the upper atmosphere.

oxygenate /'oksɪdʒə,neɪt, ɒk'sɪ-/ v.tr. supply or treat with oxygen, esp. charge or enrich (blood, water, etc.) with oxygen. □ oxygenation /,ɒksɪdʒə'neɪʃ(ə)n/ n. [F oxygéner (as OXYGEN)]

ozone /'əʊzəʊn/ n. 1 Chem. a colourless unstable toxic gas (chem. formula: O_3) with a pungent odour and powerful oxidizing properties, formed from normal oxygen by the action of electrical discharges or ultraviolet light. (See also OZONE LAYER.) 2 colloq. a invigorating air at the seaside etc. b exhilarating influence. □ ozone depletion a reduction of ozone concentration in the stratosphere, believed to be due to atmospheric pollution. ozone-friendly (of manufactured articles) containing chemicals that are not destructive to the ozone layer. ozone hole an area of the ozone layer in which depletion has occurred. □ ozonic /əʊˈzɒnɪk/ adj. [G Ozon f. Gk, neut. pres. part. of ozō smell] ozone layer n. a layer in the earth's stratosphere at an altitude of about 10 km (6.2 miles), containing a high concentration of ozone. The ozone is formed by the action of the sun's ultraviolet radiation on oxygen. Ozone itself absorbs ultraviolet radiation and the layer therefore prevents much ultraviolet light from reaching the ground. In recent years depletion of ozone in this layer has been observed, particularly at high latitudes. This has been attributed to reaction of the ozone with atmospheric pollutants, notably CFCs. Increased ultraviolet light at ground level, besides being harmful in itself, also makes a contribution to global warming.

ozonize /ˈəʊzəˌnaɪz/ v.tr. (also -ise) 1 convert into ozone. 2 treat with ozone. □ ozonizer n. ozonization /ˌəʊzənaɪˈzeɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

Palermo /pəˈleəməʊ/ the capital of the Italian island of Sicily, a port on the north coast; pop. (1990) 734,240. Founded as a trading post by the Phoenicians in the 8th century BC and later settled by the Carthaginians, it was taken by the Romans in 254 BC. It was conquered by the Arabs in AD 831, becoming in 1072 the capital of Sicily, which was then a Norman kingdom.

Palestine /ˈpælɪˌstaɪn/ a territory in the Middle East on the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea. It has had many changes of frontier and status in the course of history, and contains several places that are sacred to Christians, Jews, and Muslims. In biblical times Palestine comprised the kingdoms of Israel (see ISRAEL^1) and Judah. The land was controlled at various times by the Egyptian, Assyrian, Persian, and Roman empires before being conquered by the Arabs in AD 634. It remained in Muslim hands, except for a period during the Crusades (1098–1197), until the First World War, being part of the Ottoman Empire from 1516 to 1918, when Turkish and German forces were defeated by the British at Megiddo. The name Palestine was used as the official political title for the land west of the Jordan mandated to Britain in 1920. Jewish immigration, encouraged by the Balfour Declaration of 1917 and intensified by Nazi persecution in Europe, increased dramatically during the period 1920–45, and in 1948 the state of Israel was established. The name Palestine continues to be used, however, to describe a geographical entity, particularly in the context of the struggle for territory and political rights of Palestinian Arabs displaced when Israel was established. In 1993 an agreement was signed between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization relating to the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, by which Israeli troops withdrew in 1994 and a Palestinian administration — the Palestine National Authority (PNA) — and police force were set up. (See also PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION.) [Gk Palaistinē (used in early Christian writing), L (Syria) Palaestina (name of Roman province), f. Philistia land of the Philistines]

Palestine Liberation Organization (abbr. PLO) a political and military organization formed in 1964 to unite various Palestinian Arab groups and ultimately to bring about an independent state of Palestine. Since 1967 it has been dominated by the Al Fatah group led by Yasser Arafat. The PLO was soon active in guerrilla activities against Israel, originally from a base in Jordan but after the Jordanian civil war in 1970 from Beirut in Lebanon. In 1974 the organization was recognized by the Arab nations as the representative of all Palestinians and in 1976 it was invited to take part in a UN debate. The Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982 disorganized the PLO's military power and caused serious strains within its political superstructure, with the moderate Al Fatah group being opposed by more extreme factions. In 1988 Arafat renounced terrorism, and in the same year the PLO officially recognized Israel's right to exist; in 1993 an agreement was signed with Israel giving some autonomy to the West Bank and the Gaza Strip (see PALESTINE).

Palestinian /ˌpælɪˈstɪnɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to Palestine or the Palestinians. ● n. a native or inhabitant of Palestine, esp. an Arab born in (or descended from someone born in) the former mandated territory of Palestine.

Pan /pæn/ Gk Mythol. a god of flocks and herds, native to Arcadia, usually represented with the horns, ears, and legs of a goat on a man's body. He was thought of as loving mountains, caves, and lonely places and as playing on the pan-pipes. His sudden appearance was supposed to cause terror similar to that of a frightened and stampeding herd, and the word panic is derived from his name. This probably meant 'the feeder' (i.e. herdsman), although it was regularly associated with Greek pas or pan (= all), giving rise to his identification as a god of nature or the universe.

Panama occupies the isthmus connecting North and South America; much of the country is low-lying tropical rainforest. Colonized by Spain in the early 16th century, Panama was freed from imperial control in 1821, becoming a Colombian province. It gained full independence in 1903, although the construction of the Panama Canal and the leasing of the zone around it to the US (until 1977) split the country in two. In 1989 US troops invaded Panama in a successful attempt to arrest the country's President, Gen. Manuel Noriega, so that he could face trial for drug trafficking. □ Panamanian /ˌpænəˈmeɪnɪən/ adj. & n.

panama /ˈpænəˌmɑː/ n. a hat of strawlike material, orig. made from the leaves of a palm tree. [PANAMA]

Panama Canal a canal about 80 km (50 miles) long, across the Isthmus of Panama, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Its construction, begun by Ferdinand de Lesseps in 1881 but abandoned in 1889, was completed by the US between 1904 and 1914. The surrounding territory, the (Panama) Canal Zone, was administered by the US until 1979, when it was returned to the control of Panama. Control of the canal itself remained with the US until 1999, when it was ceded to Panama.

Panama City the capital of Panama, situated on the Pacific coast close to the Panama Canal; pop. (1990) 584,800. The old city, founded by the Spanish in 1519 on the site of a native fishing village, was destroyed by the Welsh buccaneer Sir Henry Morgan (*c.*1635–88) in 1671. The new city, built in 1674 on a site a little to the west, became capital of Panama in 1903, when the republic gained its independence from Colombia. The city developed rapidly after the opening of the Panama Canal in 1914.

panda /ˈpændə/ n. 1 (in full giant panda) a large herbivorous bearlike mammal, Ailuropoda melanoleuca, found in limited mountainous forested areas of China and Tibet, having characteristic black and white markings. (See note below.) 2 (in full red or lesser panda) a raccoon-like mammal, Ailurus fulgens, native to the Himalayas and eastern Asia, with reddish-brown fur and a long bushy tail. □ panda car Brit. a police patrol car (orig. white with black stripes on the doors). [Nepali name]

- The giant panda was regarded as a bear until its relationship to the red panda was believed established, both animals then being placed in the raccoon family on the basis of their teeth. However, recent anatomical, biochemical, and chromosome studies of the giant panda have shown that it does indeed belong in the bear family. Its unusual characteristics appear to have resulted from its specialized diet, and its total dependence on bamboo has made it highly vulnerable. The red panda is related to both bears and raccoons, and is usually placed in its own family.

▪ Pantomime derives its name from the pantomimus of ancient Rome, in which a player represented in mime the different characters in a short scene based on history or mythology. In its modern form, however, pantomime is a British form of theatrical entertainment derived from the harlequinade, primarily for children and associated with Christmas. It is based on the dramatization of a fairy tale or nursery story, and includes songs and topical jokes, buffoonery and slapstick, and standard characters such as a pantomime dame played by a man, a principal boy played by a woman, and a pantomime animal (e.g. a horse, cat, or goose) played by actors dressed in a comic costume, with some regional variations. Pantomimes remain a feature of the Christmas season in Britain, and now often feature performers well known from television. (See also HARLEQUINADE.)

Papal States a part of central Italy held between 756 and 1870 by the Catholic Church, corresponding to the modern regions of Emilia-Romagna, Marche, Umbria, and Lazio. Taken from the Lombards by the Frankish king Pepin III, father of Charlemagne, the states were given to the papacy as a strategy to undermine Lombard expansionism. Greatly extended by Pope Innocent III in the 13th century and Pope Julius II in the 16th, they were incorporated into the newly unified Italy in 1860 and 1870. Their annexation to Italy deprived the papacy of its temporal powers until the Lateran Treaty of 1929 recognized the sovereignty of the Vatican City.

- The essence of paper-making is the compact interlacing of natural fibres. It originated in China about 2,000 years ago, when the fibres used were bamboo, rags, and old fishing-nets. In the 8th century the Arabs learned the process from Chinese prisoners captured in war; they used mostly flax as fibre. Paper-making spread through Europe from Moorish Spain during the 12th to 15th centuries. Rags were the main source of fibre until the 19th century, when wood fibres came into use; these are now the main constituent, though rags, straw, esparto grass, and waste paper are important ingredients for mixing with wood fibres. The fibres are pulped, washed, bleached, and dried before passing to a paper mill, where the pulp is mixed with water and beaten to a uniform consistency, often with additives such as size, dye, or filler. A thin stream is made to flow on to a wire mesh belt which allows water to drain away, leaving a felt of sufficient strength to pass between heated rollers which compress and dry the paper. Special papers are coated with, for example, white clay to give an especially smooth surface for fine printing of illustrations. Paper is now generally made from fast-growing trees which are replaced as they are felled, and used paper is increasingly recycled.

Paracelsus /ˌpærə'selsəs/ (born Theophrastus Phillipus Aureolus Bombastus von Hohenheim) (*c.*1493–1541), Swiss physician. He developed a new approach to medicine and philosophy condemning medical teaching that was not based on observation and experience. He introduced chemical remedies to replace traditional herbal ones, and gave alchemy a wider perspective. Paracelsus saw illness as having a specific external cause rather than being caused by an imbalance of the humours in the body, although this progressive view was offset by his overall occultist perspective. His study of a disease of miners was one of the first accounts of an occupational disease.

▪ The principle of the parachute had been noted by Leonardo da Vinci. The first man to demonstrate one in action was Frenchman Louis-Sebastien Lenormand (1757–1839), jumping from a high tower (1783). Another pioneer was balloonist Jean Pierre François Blanchard, and in the 19th century jumps from balloons were often made as stunts. The first jump from an aircraft was made in 1912; by the end of the First World War parachutes were becoming standard equipment in military aeroplanes. The Second World War saw parachutes used to drop troops as well as supplies and clandestine agents, while since the war parachuting (including skydiving) has become a popular sport.

Paris^{1} /ˈpærɪs, French pari/ the capital of France, on the River Seine; pop. (1990) 2,175,200. An early settlement on the small island in the Seine, known now as the Île de la Cité, was inhabited by a Gallic people called the Parisii. It was taken by the Romans, who called it Lutetia, in 52 BC. In the 5th century AD it fell to the Frankish king Clovis, who made it his seat of power. It declined under the succeeding Merovingians, but was finally established as the capital in 987 under Hugh Capet. The city was extensively developed during the reign of Philippe-Auguste (1180–1223) and organized into three parts: the Île de la Cité, the Right Bank, and the Left Bank. During the reign of Francis I (1515–47) the city expanded again, its architecture showing the influence of the Italian Renaissance. The city's neoclassical architecture characterizes the modernization of the Napoleonic era. This continued under Napoleon III, when the bridges and boulevards of the modern city were built. Paris was occupied by the German army in 1940, being liberated by the Allies when the Germans withdrew (Aug. 1944).

Paris^{2} /ˈpærɪs/ Gk Mythol. a Trojan prince, the son of Priam and Hecuba. Appointed by the gods to decide who among the three goddesses Hera, Athene, and Aphrodite should win a prize for beauty, he awarded it to Aphrodite, who promised him the fairest woman in the world — Helen, wife of Menelaus king of Sparta. He abducted Helen, bringing about the Trojan War, in which he killed Achilles but was later himself killed. The Judgement of Paris has been a favourite theme in art from the mid-7th century BC.

▪ The British Parliament emerged in medieval times as the assembly of the king and his Lords, meeting irregularly at the king's bidding to discuss judicial and other matters of general importance, especially finances. From the 13th century knights and burgesses representing the shires and boroughs were occasionally summoned to these assemblies, and under Edward III these 'Commons' began to meet separately from the 'Lords', although they did not gain their own meeting chamber until the 16th century. Free speech, regular meetings, and control over taxation were not established as rights until after the Civil War and the Bill of Rights following the 1688 Revolution. After the passing of the first Reform Act (1832) the traditional influence of the landed aristocracy began to decline, and the Parliament Act of 1911 reduced the power of the House of Lords, allowing them to delay but not veto legislation; this Act also introduced payment for MPs. A further Act in 1949 reduced the maximum period of delay and ended the right completely for financial legislation, leaving the House of Commons unequivocally the more powerful and important body. The building in which Parliament meets was designed by Sir Charles Barry and erected after the destruction by fire of the original Palace of Westminster, its meeting-place, in 1834.

[ME f. L particula (as PART)] particle accelerator n. Physics an apparatus for accelerating subatomic particles to high velocities by means of electric or electromagnetic fields. The accelerated particles are generally made to collide with other particles, either as a research technique or for the generation of high-energy X-rays and gamma rays. The earliest successful experiments with accelerators were those in which the British physicists Cockcroft and Walton 'split the atom' (by bombarding atoms with accelerated electrons) in 1932. The search for higher energies led to the use of circular, rather than linear, accelerators such as the cyclotron, betatron, and synchrotron. Storage rings, introduced in 1956, in which high-energy particles of opposite charge are made to collide with each other, have produced the highest particle energies — tens of gigaelectronvolts — so far obtained.

Pascal /pæ'sko:l/, Blaise (1623–62), French mathematician, physicist, and religious philosopher. A child prodigy, before the age of 16 he had proved an important theorem in the projective geometry of conics, and at 19 constructed the first mechanical calculator to be offered for sale. He discovered that air has weight, confirmed that vacuum could exist, and derived the principle that the pressure of a fluid at rest is transmitted equally in all directions. He also founded the theory of probabilities, and developed a forerunner of integral calculus. He later entered a Jansenist convent, where he wrote two classics of French devotional thought, the Lettres Provinciales (1656–7), directed against the casuistry of the Jesuits, and Pensées (1670), a defence of Christianity.

Pasternak /ˈpæstəˌnæk/, Boris (Leonidovich) (1890–1960), Russian poet, novelist, and translator. On the eve of the Russian Revolution in 1917 he wrote the lyric poems My Sister, Life (1922), which established his reputation when published. In the 1930s he started work on the novel Doctor Zhivago (1957), a testament to the experience of the Russian intelligentsia before, during, and after the Revolution. It was banned in the Soviet Union and first published in Italian and then, with equal success, in other languages; in 1958 Pasternak was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature, but was forced to turn it down under pressure from the Soviet authorities.

Pasteur /pæˈstɜː(r)/, Louis (1822–95), French chemist and bacteriologist. His early work, in which he discovered the existence of dextrorotatory and laevorotatory forms of sugars, was of fundamental importance in chemistry, but he is popularly remembered for his 'germ theory' (1865) — that each fermentation process could be traced to a specific living micro-organism. Following the success of his introduction of pasteurization, he developed an interest in diseases. Pasteur isolated bacteria infecting silkworms, finding methods of preventing the disease from spreading. He then isolated the bacteria causing anthrax and chicken cholera, made vaccines against them, and pioneered vaccination against rabies using attenuated virus.

▪ Patents for inventions seem to have been introduced in Italy in the 15th century and their use spread to other European states. In England, Elizabeth I and James I granted monopolies to favourites by means of ‘letters patent’, open letters relating not only to new inventions etc. but also to known commodities. General dissatisfaction with this system led to the passing of the Statute of Monopolies (1623), which declared such grants void but allowed future patents to confer exclusive rights on an inventor for a period of 14 years. In most countries patents are now regulated by statute, and are generally granted for periods of 15–20 years. Recently there has been much controversy over whether patents should be given for new strains of animals and plants produced by genetic engineering.

Paul /pɔːl/, Les (born Lester Polfus) (b.1915), American jazz guitarist. In 1946 he invented the solid-body electric guitar for which he is best known (see GUITAR); it was first promoted in 1952 as the Gibson Les Paul guitar. Paul was also among the first to use such recording techniques as overdubbing. In the 1950s he wrote and recorded a number of hit songs with his wife, Mary Ford (1928–77), such as 'Mockin' Bird Hill' (1951).

Paul III /pɔːl/ (born Alessandro Farnese) (1468–1549), Italian pope 1534–49. He excommunicated Henry VIII of England in 1538, instituted the order of the Jesuits in 1540, and initiated the Council of Trent in 1545. Paul III was also a keen patron of the arts, commissioning Michelangelo to paint the fresco of the Last Judgement for the Sistine Chapel and to design the dome of St Peter's in Rome.

Paul, St (known as Paul the Apostle, or Saul of Tarsus, or 'the Apostle of the Gentiles') (died *c.*64), missionary of Jewish descent. He was brought up as a Pharisee and at first opposed the followers of Jesus, assisting at the martyrdom of St Stephen. On a mission to Damascus, he was converted to Christianity after a vision and became one of the first major Christian missionaries and theologians. His missionary journeys are described in the Acts of the Apostles, and his epistles form part of the New Testament. He was martyred in Rome. Feast day, 29 June.

Pauli /ˈpaʊlɪ/, Wolfgang (1900–58), Austrian-born American physicist who worked chiefly in Switzerland. He is best known for the exclusion principle, according to which only two electrons in an atom could occupy the same quantum level, provided they had opposite spins. This made it easier to understand the structure of the atom and the chemical properties of the elements, and was later extended to a whole class of subatomic particles, the fermions, which includes the electron. In 1931 he postulated the existence of the neutrino, later discovered by Enrico Fermi. He was awarded the 1945 Nobel Prize for physics.

Pavlov /'pævlɒf/, Ivan (Petrovich) (1849–1936), Russian physiologist. He was awarded a Nobel Prize in 1904 for his work on digestion, but is best known for his later studies on the conditioned reflex. He showed by experiment with dogs how the secretion of saliva can be stimulated not only by food but also by the sound of a bell associated with the presentation of food, and that this sound comes to elicit salivation when presented alone. Pavlov applied his findings to show the importance of such reflexes in human and animal behaviour. His experiments form the basis for much current research in the field of conditioning. □ Pavlovian /pæv'ləʊvɪən/ adj.

Peirce /pɪəs/, Charles Sanders (1839–1914), American philosopher and logician. One of the founders of American pragmatism, he proposed a theory of meaning in which the meaning of a belief or an idea is to be understood by the actions, uses, and habits to which it gives rise. Logic was central to Peirce's philosophic concerns; his work on logical atomism and the distinction between arbitrary and non-arbitrary signs was highly influential in the development of modern semantics and semiotics. He also pioneered the logic of relations, in which he argued that induction is an indispensable correlative of deduction, and, as a formal logician, discovered the quantifier shortly after Gottlob Frege.

Perón[1] /pe'rɒn/, Eva (full name María Eva Duarte de Perón; known as 'Evita') (1919–52), Argentinian politician. After pursuing a successful career as a radio actress in the 1930s and 1940s, she married Juan Perón and became de facto Minister of Health and of Labour. Idolized by the poor, she organized female workers, secured the vote for women, and earmarked substantial government funds for social welfare. She was nominated for the vice-presidency in 1951, but was forced by the army to withdraw. She died the following year from cancer.

Perón[2] /pe'rɒn/, Juan Domingo (1895–1974), Argentinian soldier and statesman, President 1946–55 and 1973–4. He participated in the military coup organized by pro-fascist army officers in 1943, and was elected President in 1946, when he assumed dictatorial powers. He won popular support with his programme of social reform, but, after the death of his second wife, Evita, the faltering economy and his conflict with the Roman Catholic Church led to his removal and exile in 1955. Following a resurgence by the Peronist Party in the early 1970s, Perón returned to power in 1973, but died in office. ☐ Peronism /'perəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. Peronist adj. & n.

Persia /'pɜːʃə, 'pɜːʒə/ a country of SW Asia, now known as Iran. The ancient kingdom of Persia, corresponding to the modern district of Fars in SW Iran, became in the 6th century BC the domain of the Achaemenid dynasty. It was extended under Cyrus the Great into a powerful empire, which included Media, Lydia, and Babylonia, and eventually all of western Asia, Egypt, and parts of eastern Europe. The empire, defied by the Greeks in the Persian Wars of the 5th century BC, was eventually overthrown by Alexander the Great in 330 BC. The country was subsequently ruled by a succession of dynasties until it was conquered by the Muslim Arabs between AD 633 and 651. Taken by the Mongols in the 13th century, Persia was ruled by the Kajar dynasty from 1794 until 1925, when Reza Khan Pahlavi became shah. It was renamed Iran in 1935. (See also IRAN.)

- The Persian language, spoken by over 30 million people in Iran, by about 5 million in Afghanistan (as Dari), and by another 2.2 million in Tajikistan (as Tajik), belongs to the Iranian language group. It is attested from the 6th century BC, when Old Persian was the language of the Persian empire, which at one time spread from the Mediterranean to India. Old Persian was written in cuneiform, but in the 2nd century BC the Persians created their own alphabet (Pahlavi), which remained in use until the Islamic conquest in the 7th century; since then Persian has been written in the Arabic script. The modern language is also called Farsi.

Persian Gulf (also called Arabian Gulf; informally the Gulf) an arm of the Arabian Sea, to which it is connected by the Strait of Hormuz and the Gulf of Oman. It extends north-westwards between the Arabian peninsula and the coast of SW Iran.

Persian Wars the wars fought between Greece and Persia in the 5th century BC, in which the Persians sought to extend their territory over the Greek world. The wars began in 490 BC when Darius I sent an expedition to punish the Greeks for having supported the Ionian cities in their unsuccessful revolt against Persian rule; the Persians were defeated by a small force of Athenians at Marathon. Ten years later Darius' son Xerxes I attempted an invasion with a land and sea force, crossing the Hellespont with a bridge of boats. He won a land-battle at Thermopylae and devastated Attica, but Persian forces were defeated on land at Plataea and in a sea battle at Salamis (480 BC), and retreated. Intermittent war continued in various areas until peace was signed in 449 BC.

▪ Many of the principles of perspective were known to the Greeks and Romans but later lost. The mathematical laws of perspective were first demonstrated by the architect Brunelleschi in the early 15th century. Shortly afterwards (1436) his fellow architect Alberti devised a perspective construction for the special use of painters. Perspective utilizes such optical effects as the apparent convergence of parallel lines as they recede from the spectator so as to create a pictorial representation of the same kind of spatial relationships that we see in the real world, with objects appearing to diminish in size the further away they are. Masaccio and Uccello were among the first artists to put these theories into practice.

Philip[1] /ˈfɪlɪp/ the name of five kings of ancient Macedonia, notably:

Philip II (known as Philip II of Macedon) (382–336 BC), father of Alexander the Great, reigned 359–336. He unified and expanded ancient Macedonia, as well as carrying out a number of army reforms, such as the introduction of the phalanx formation. His victory over Athens and Thebes at the battle of Chaeronea in 338 established his hegemony over Greece. He was assassinated as he was about to lead an expedition against Persia.

Philip V (238–179 BC), reigned 221–179. His expansionist policies led to a series of confrontations with Rome, culminating in his defeat in Thessaly in 197 and his resultant loss of control over Greece.

Philip^{2} /ˈfɪlɪp/ the name of six kings of France, notably:

Philip II (known as Philip Augustus) (1165–1223), son of Louis VII, reigned 1180–1223. His reign was marked by a dramatic expansion of Capetian influence, at the expense of the English Plantagenet empire in France. After mounting a series of military campaigns against the English kings Henry II, Richard I, and John, Philip succeeded in regaining Normandy (1204), Anjou (1204), and most of Poitou (1204–5). Towards the end of his reign, after success in the crusade (1209–31) against the Albigenses, he also managed to add fresh territories in the south to his kingdom.

Philip IV (known as Philip the Fair) (1268–1314), son of Philip III, reigned 1285–1314. He continued the Capetian policy of extending French dominions, waging wars of expansion with England (1294–1303) and Flanders (1302–5). His reign, however, was dominated by his struggle with the papacy; in 1303 he imprisoned Pope Boniface VIII (*c.*1228–1303), and, in 1305, his influence secured the appointment of the French Clement V (*c.*1260–1314) as pope. Philip's domination of the papacy was further consolidated when Clement moved the papal seat to Avignon (1309), where it remained until 1377. Philip also persuaded Clement to dissolve the powerful and wealthy order of the Knights Templars; its leaders were executed and its property divided between the Crown and the Knights Hospitallers.

Philip VI (known as Philip of Valois) (1293–1350), reigned 1328–50. The founder of the Valois dynasty, Philip came to the throne on the death of his cousin Charles IV (1294–1328), whose only child was a girl and barred from ruling by Salic Law. His claim was disputed by Edward III of England, who could trace a claim through his mother Isabella of France. War between the two countries, which was to develop into the Hundred Years War, ensued. Philip was defeated by Edward at the Battle of Crécy (1346).

Philip^{3} /ˈfɪlɪp/ the name of five kings of Spain, notably:

Philip I (known as Philip the Handsome) (1478–1506), reigned 1504–6. Son of the Holy Roman emperor Maximilian I of Habsburg (1459–1519), Philip married the infanta Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile, in 1496. After Isabella's death, he ruled Castile jointly with Joanna, establishing the Habsburgs as the ruling dynasty in Spain.

Philip II (1527–98), son of Charles I, reigned 1556–98. Philip married the second of his four wives, Mary I of England, in 1554, and came to the throne following his father's abdication two years later. His reign came to be dominated by an anti-Protestant crusade which exhausted the Spanish economy. He failed to suppress revolt in the Netherlands (1567–79), and although he conquered Portugal in 1580, his war against England also proved a failure, an attempted Spanish invasion being thwarted by the defeat of the Armada in 1588.

Philip V (1683–1746), grandson of Louis XIV, reigned 1700–24 and 1724–46. The selection of Philip, a Bourbon, as successor to Charles II, and Louis XIV's insistence that Philip remain an heir to the French throne, gave rise to the threat of the union of the French and Spanish thrones and led to the War of the Spanish Succession (1701–14). Internationally recognized as king of Spain by the Peace of Utrecht (1713–14), Philip reigned until 1724, when he abdicated in favour of his son Louis I (1707–24), but returned to the throne following Louis's death in the same year.

Philip, Prince, Duke of Edinburgh (b.1921), husband of Elizabeth II. The son of Prince Andrew of Greece and Denmark (1882–1944), he married Princess Elizabeth in 1947; on the eve of his marriage he was created Duke of Edinburgh. He served in the Royal Navy until Elizabeth's accession in 1952.

Philip, St 1 an Apostle. He is commemorated with St James the Less on 1 May. 2 (known as St Philip the Evangelist) one of seven deacons appointed to superintend the secular business of the Church at Jerusalem (Acts 6:5–6). Feast day, 6 June.

Philip Augustus /ɔːˈgʌstəs/, Philip II of France (see PHILIP^{2}).

Philip of Valois /ˈvælwʌ/, Philip VI of France (see PHILIP^{2}).

Philippi /ˈfɪlɪˌpaɪ, fɪˈlɪpaɪ/ (Greek Fílippoi /ˈfilipi/) a city in ancient Macedonia, the scene in 42 BC of two battles in which Mark Antony and Octavian defeated Brutus and Cassius. The ruins lie close to the Aegean coast in NE Greece, near the port of Kaválla (ancient Neapolis).

Philippians, Epistle to the /fɪˈlɪpɪənz/ a book of the New Testament, an epistle of St Paul to the Church at Philippi in Macedonia.

philippic /fɪˈlɪpɪk/ n. a bitter verbal attack or denunciation. [L philippicus f. Gk philippikos the name of Demosthenes' speeches against Philip II of Macedon and of Cicero's against Mark Antony]

Philippine /ˈfɪlɪˌpiːn/ adj. of or relating to the Philippines or its people; Filipino. [Philip II of Spain (see PHILIP^{3})]

Philippines /ˈfɪlɪˌpiːnz/ a country in SE Asia consisting of an archipelago of over 7,000 islands separated from the Asian mainland by the South China Sea; pop. (1990) 60,684,890; official languages Pilipino and English; capital, Manila. The main islands are Luzon, Mindanao, Mindoro, Leyte, Samar, Negros, and Panay. The Portuguese navigator Magellan visited the islands in 1521 and was killed there. Conquered by Spain in 1565, and named after the king's son, the islands were ceded to the US following the Spanish-American War in 1898. Occupied by the Japanese between 1941 and 1944, the Philippines achieved full independence as a republic in 1946 and has continued to maintain close links with the US. From 1965 to 1986 the country was under the increasingly dictatorial rule of President Ferdinand Marcos (1917–89). He was driven from power by a popular revolt and replaced by Corazón Aquino (b.1933), President 1986–92, the widow of an assassinated opposition leader; she introduced democratic reforms.

(See note below.) 2 the Semitic language of the Phoenicians. ● adj. of or relating to Phoenicia or its people, language, or colonies. [ME f. OF phenicien f. L PHOENICIA]

- The Phoenicians were a people of unknown origin but probably descended from the Canaanites of the 2nd millennium BC, who occupied the coastal plain of what is now Lebanon and Syria in the early 1st millennium BC and derived their prosperity from trade and manufacturing industries in textiles, glass, metalware, carved ivory, wood, and jewellery. Their trading contacts extended throughout Asia, and reached westwards as far as Africa (where they founded Carthage), Spain, and possibly Britain. The Phoenicians continued to thrive under Assyrian and then Persian suzerainty until 332 BC, when the capital Tyre was sacked and the country incorporated in the Greek world by Alexander the Great. The Phoenicians invented an alphabet which was borrowed by the Greeks and thence passed down into Western cultural tradition.

phosphatase /ˈfɒsfəˌteɪz, -ˌteɪs/ n. Biochem. any enzyme that catalyses the synthesis or hydrolysis of an organic phosphate.

phosphate /ˈfosfeɪt/ n. 1 a Chem. a salt or ester of phosphoric acid. b (usu. in pl.) rock or fertilizer consisting mainly of calcium phosphate. 2 an effervescent drink containing a small amount of phosphate. □ phosphatic /fosˈfætɪk/ adj. [F f. phosphore PHOSPHORUS] phosphene /ˈfosfiːn/ n. the sensation of rings of light produced by pressure on the eyeball due to irritation of the retina. [irreg. f. Gk phōs light + phainō show] phosphide /ˈfosfaɪd/ n. Chem. a binary compound of phosphorus with another element or group.

phosphine /ˈfosfiːn/ n. Chem. a colourless ill-smelling gas, phosphorus trihydride (chem. formula: PH_3) □ phosphinic /fosˈfɪnɪk/ adj. [PHOSPHO- + -INE^4, after amine] phosphite /ˈfosfaɪt/ n. Chem. a salt or ester of phosphorous acid. [F (as PHOSPHO-)]

phospho- /ˈfosfəʊ/ comb. form denoting phosphorus. [abbr.]

phospholipid /ˌfosfəˈlɪpɪd/ n. Biochem. any lipid consisting of a phosphate group and one or more fatty acids, including the main structural lipids of cell membranes.

phosphor /ˈfosfə(r)/ n. 1 = PHOSPHORUS. 2 a synthetic fluorescent or phosphorescent substance, esp. used in cathode-ray tubes. □ phosphor bronze a tough hard bronze alloy containing a small amount of phosphorus, used esp. for bearings. [G f. L phosphorus PHOSPHORUS] phosphorate /ˈfosfəˌreɪt/ v.tr. combine or impregnate with phosphorus.

phosphorescence /ˌfosfəˈres(ə)ns/ n. 1 radiation similar to fluorescence but detectable after excitation ceases. 2 the emission of light without combustion or perceptible heat. □ phosphoresce v.intr. phosphorescent adj.

phosphoric /fosˈforɪk/ adj. 1 Chem. containing phosphorus, especially in its higher valency (5). 2 phosphorescent. □ phosphoric acid a crystalline acid (chem. formula: H_3PO_4), forming syrupy solutions with water, and having many commercial uses, e.g. in fertilizer and soap manufacture and food processing. [F phosphorique (as PHOSPHORUS)] phosphorite /ˈfosfəˌraɪt/ n. Mineral. a non-crystalline form of apatite.

phosphorous /ˈfosfərəs/ adj. 1 Chem. of or containing phosphorus, especially in its lower valency (3). 2 phosphorescent. □ phosphorous acid a crystalline dibasic acid (chem. formula: H_3PO_3). [PHOSPHORUS + -OUS] phosphorus /ˈfosfərəs/ n. a non-metallic chemical element (atomic number 15; symbol P). Phosphorus was first isolated by the German alchemist Hennig Brand (fl. 1670) in the 17th century. It exists in a number of allotropic forms; the most familiar, known as white phosphorus, is a yellowish waxy solid which ignites spontaneously in air and glows in the dark; red phosphorus, which is less reactive, is used in making matches. Phosphorus is abundant in the earth's crust in the form of phosphates. It is essential to living organisms; organic phosphates are involved in storing energy in cells, and calcium phosphate is a major component of bone. The main commercial use of phosphorus compounds is in fertilizers. [L, = morning star, f. Gk phōsphoros f. phōs light + -phoros -bringing] phosphorylate /fosˈforɪˌleɪt/ v.tr. Chem. introduce a phosphate group into (an organic molecule etc.). □ phosphorylation /-ˌforɪˈleɪʃ(ə)n/ n.

phossy jaw /ˈfosɪ/ n. colloq. hist. gangrene of the jawbone caused by phosphorus poisoning, esp. as a former occupational disease in the match industry. [abbr.]

phot /fot, fəʊt/ n. a unit of illumination equal to one lumen per square centimetre. [Gk phōs phōtos light] photic /ˈfəʊtɪk/ adj. 1 of or relating to light. 2 (of ocean layers) reached by sunlight.

photism /ˈfəʊtɪz(ə)m/ n. a hallucinatory sensation or vision of light. [Gk phōtismos f. phōtizō shine f. phōs phōtos light]

Photius /ˈfəʊtɪəs/ (*c.*820–*c.*891), Byzantine scholar and patriarch of Constantinople. His most important work is the Bibliotheca, a critical account of 280 earlier prose works and an invaluable source of information about many works now lost.

photobiology /ˌfəʊtəʊbaɪˈɒlədʒɪ/ n. the study of the effects of light on living organisms.

photocell /ˈfəʊtəʊˌsel/ n. = photoelectric cell.

photochemical /ˌfəʊtəʊˈkemɪk(ə)l/ adj. of or relating to the chemical action of light. □ photochemical smog a condition of the atmosphere caused by the action of sunlight on atmospheric pollutants, resulting in haze and high levels of ozone and nitrogen oxide. □ photochemically adv.

photochemistry /ˌfəʊtəʊˈkemɪstrɪ/ n. the study of the chemical effects of light.

photochromic /ˌfəʊtəʊˈkrəʊmɪk/ adj. changing colour or shade reversibly in light of a particular frequency or intensity (photochromic lens). [PHOTO- + Gk khrōma colour] photocomposition /ˌfəʊtəʊˌkompəˈzɪʃ(ə)n/ n. = FILMSETTING.

photoconductivity /ˌfəʊtəʊˌkɒndʌkˈtɪvɪtɪ/ n. conductivity due to the action of light. □ photoconductive /-kənˈdʌktɪv/ adj. photoconductor n.

photocopier /ˈfəʊtəʊˌkopɪə(r)/ n. a machine for producing photocopies.

photocopy /ˈfəʊtəʊˌkopɪ/ n. & v. ● n. (pl. -ies) a photographic copy of printed or written material produced by a process involving the action of light on a specially prepared surface. ● v.tr. (-ies, -ied) make a photocopy of. □ photocopiable adj.

photodegradable /ˌfəʊtəʊdɪ'greɪdəb(ə)l/ adj. capable of being decomposed by the action of light, esp. sunlight.

photodiode /ˌfəʊtəʊ'daɪəʊd/ n. Electronics a semiconductor diode responding electrically to illumination.

photoelectric /ˌfəʊtəʊɪ'lektrɪk/ adj. marked by or using emissions of electrons from substances exposed to light. □ photoelectric cell a device using this effect to generate current. □ photoelectricity /-ˌɪlek'trɪsɪtɪ, -ˌel-/ n.

photoelectron /ˌfəʊtəʊɪ'lektrɒn/ n. Physics an electron emitted from an atom by interaction with a photon, esp. one emitted from a solid surface by the action of light.

photoemission /ˌfəʊtəʊɪ'mɪʃ(ə)n/ n. Physics the emission of electrons from a surface by the action of incident light. □ photoemitter n.

photoengraving /ˌfəʊtəʊɪn'greɪvɪŋ/ n. 1 a process by which an image is photographically transferred to a plate for relief printing, the non-printing areas being etched. 2 a plate or print made in this way.

photofit /'fəʊtəʊˌfɪt/ n. a reconstructed picture of a person (esp. one sought by the police) made from composite photographs of facial features (cf. IDENTIKIT).

photogenic /ˌfəʊtə'dʒenɪk, -'dʒiːnɪk/ adj. 1 (esp. of a person) having an appearance that looks pleasing in photographs. 2 Biol. producing or emitting light. □ photogenically adv.

photogram /'fəʊtəʊˌgræm/ n. 1 a picture produced with photographic materials but without a camera. 2 archaic a photograph.

photogrammetry /ˌfəʊtəʊ'græmɪtrɪ/ n. the use of photography for surveying. □ photogrammetrist n.

photograph /'fəʊtəˌgrɑːf/ n. & v. ● n. a picture formed by means of the chemical action of light or other radiation on sensitive film. (See PHOTOGRAPHY.) ● v. 1 tr. (also absol.) take a photograph of (a person etc.). 2 intr. appear (well etc.) when in a photograph. □ photographable adj. photographer /fə'tɒgrəfə(r)/ n.

photographic /ˌfəʊtə'græfɪk/ adj. 1 of, used in, or produced by photography. 2 having the accuracy of a photograph (photographic likeness). □ photographically adv.

photography /fə'tɒgrəfɪ/ n. 1 the art or process of taking photographs. 2 the business of producing and printing photographs. (See note below.)

▪ The world's first photograph was taken in 1826 by a Frenchman, Joseph-Nicéphore Niépce (1765–1833), who produced an image on a pewter plate, using bitumen that hardened slowly in bright light. Modern photography, however, is based on the property of silver compounds of decomposing to metallic silver when exposed to light. The first practical photographic method was the daguerreotype, developed by Louis-Jacques-Mandé Daguerre and first published in 1839; this produced positive images directly on silvered copper plates. The first negative-positive process, from which modern photography has evolved, was devised by Fox Talbot. He made the first photographic negative in 1835, using coated paper placed inside a camera obscura. His methods allowed an unlimited number of prints to be made from one negative; he later discovered that a brief exposure produced a latent image which could be made visible by chemical development. Modern photography essentially uses a similar process, with the light-sensitive salts held in an emulsion mounted usually on transparent roll film. Colour film, using multiple layers of emulsion, was introduced by the Eastman Kodak Company in 1935. (See also CAMERA.)

Photography has become important in science and industry, in aerial reconnaissance, and in medicine. Interest in it as an art form is as old as the process itself. Photographic societies were soon formed, techniques being explored at first with the idea of giving to the medium the manipulative latitude of painting, then (by *c.*1890) for their own sake. New freedoms in the other arts, and especially in painting, were paralleled in photography as surrealists experimented with dark-room techniques, and Max Ernst and others produced photomontages, until realism again became popular in the 1930s. An immense range of photographic materials, equipment, and skills now makes photography as versatile a medium as painting; famous names of photography include Julia Margaret Cameron, Robert Doisneau, Cecil Beaton, Diane Arbus, and David Bailey.

photogravure /ˌfəʊtəʊgrə'vjʊə(r)/ n. 1 an image produced from a photographic negative transferred to a metal plate and etched in. 2 this process. [F (as PHOTO-, gravure engraving)] photojournalism /ˌfəʊtəʊ'dʒɜːnəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. the art or practice of relating news chiefly by photographs. □ photojournalist n.

photolithography /ˌfəʊtəʊlɪ'θɒgrəfɪ/ n. (also photolitho /-'laɪθəʊ/) lithography using plates made photographically. □ photolithographer n. photolithographic /-ˌlɪθə'græfɪk/ adj. photolithographically adv.

photolysis /fəʊ'tɒlɪsɪs/ n. Chem. decomposition or dissociation of molecules by the action of light. □ photolyse /'fəʊtəˌlaɪz/ v.tr. & intr. photolytic /ˌfəʊtə'lɪtɪk/ adj.

photometer /fəʊ'tɒmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for measuring light. □ photometry n. photometric /ˌfəʊtəʊ'metrɪk/ adj.

photomontage /ˌfəʊtəʊmɒn'tɑːʒ/ n. 1 the technique of producing a montage (see MONTAGE 2) using photographs. 2 a composite picture produced in this way.

photomultiplier /ˌfəʊtəʊ'mʌltɪˌplaɪə(r)/ n. an instrument containing a photocell and a series of electrodes, used to detect and amplify the light from very faint sources.

photon /'fəʊtɒn/ n. Physics a quantum of electromagnetic radiation energy (e.g. light), proportional to the frequency of radiation. [Gk phōs phōtos light, after electron] photonovel /'fəʊtəʊˌnɒv(ə)l/ n. a novel told in a series of photographs with superimposed speech bubbles.

photoperiod /ˌfəʊtəʊ'pɪərɪəd/ n. Biol. the period of daily illumination which an organism receives. □ photoperiodic /-ˌpɪərɪ'ɒdɪk/ adj.

photoperiodism /ˌfəʊtəʊ'pɪərɪəˌdɪz(ə)m/ n. Biol. the response of an organism to changes in the lengths of the daily periods of light.

photophobia /ˌfəʊtəʊ'fəʊbɪə/ n. an abnormal fear of or aversion to light. □ photophobic adj.

photorealism /ˌfəʊtəʊ'rɪəlɪz(ə)m/ n. detailed and unidealized representation in art, characteristically of the banal, everyday, or sordid aspects of life.

photoreceptor /ˌfəʊtəʊrɪ'septə(r)/ n. Biol. a structure of a living organism which responds to incident light, esp. a cell in which light is converted to a nervous or other signal.

photosensitive /ˌfəʊtəʊ'sensɪtɪv/ adj. reacting chemically, electrically, etc., to light. □ photosensitivity /-ˌsensɪ'tɪvɪtɪ/ n.

photosetting /'fəʊtəʊˌsetɪŋ/ n. = FILMSETTING. □ photoset v.tr. (past and past part. -set). photosetter n.

photosphere /'fəʊtəʊˌsfɪə(r)/ n. Astron. the luminous envelope of a star from which its light and heat radiate. □ photospheric /ˌfəʊtəʊ'sferɪk/ adj.

Photostat /'fəʊtəʊˌstæt/ n. & v. ● n. propr. 1 a type of machine for making photocopies. 2 a copy made by this means. ● v.tr. (photostat) (-statted, -statting) make a Photostat of. □ photostatic /ˌfəʊtəʊ'stætɪk/ adj.

photosynthesis /ˌfəʊtəʊ'sɪnθɪsɪs/ n. the process by which the energy of sunlight is used by green plants and some unicellular organisms to synthesize carbohydrates from carbon dioxide and water. (See note below.) □ photosynthesize v.tr. & intr. (also -ise). photosynthetic /-sɪn'θetɪk/ adj. photosynthetically adv.

▪ Photosynthesis in plants is usually carried out using the green pigment chlorophyll, which has the ability to absorb the radiant energy of the sun and convert it via a complicated metabolic pathway into chemical energy in the form of sugars. It is the only process by which organisms can manufacture carbohydrates, so that almost all life on earth is ultimately dependent on green plants. During the process of photosynthesis carbon dioxide and water are used up and oxygen is generated: higher plants on land and algae in the sea therefore have a major beneficial effect on the constitution of the atmosphere. Some algae and bacteria have red, blue, or brown photosynthetic pigments.

phototransistor /ˌfəʊtəʊtræn'zɪstə(r), -trɑːn'zɪstə(r)/ n. Electronics a transistor that responds to incident light by generating and amplifying an electric current.

phototropism /ˌfəʊtəʊ'trəʊpɪz(ə)m, fə'tɒtrəˌpɪz(ə)m/ n. the tendency of a plant etc. to bend or turn towards or away from a source of light. □ phototropic /-'trəʊpɪk, -'trɒpɪk/ adj.

phototypesetting /ˌfəʊtəʊ'taɪpˌsetɪŋ/ n. = FILMSETTING.

photovoltaic /ˌfəʊtəʊvɒl'teɪɪk/ adj. relating to the production of electric current at the junction of two substances exposed to light.

phrasal /ˈfreɪz(ə)l/ adj. Gram. consisting of a phrase. □ phrasal verb an idiomatic phrase consisting of a verb and an adverb (e.g. break down), a verb and a preposition (e.g. see to), or a combination of both (e.g. look down on).

phrase /freɪz/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a group of words forming a conceptual unit, but not a sentence. 2 an idiomatic or short pithy expression. 3 a manner or mode of expression (a nice turn of phrase). 4 Mus. a group of notes forming a distinct unit within a larger piece. ● v.tr. 1 express in words (phrased the reply badly). 2 (esp. when reading aloud or speaking) divide (sentences etc.) into units so as to convey the meaning of the whole. 3 Mus. divide (music) into phrases, esp. in performance. □ phrase book a book for tourists etc. listing useful expressions with their equivalent in a foreign language. □ phrasing n. [earlier phrasis f. - The subject-matter of physics has undergone marked changes throughout the centuries. For Aristotle it included the study of all natural phenomena, but excluded quantitative subjects such as mechanics, music, and optics which were regarded as dealing with artefacts. By the 17th century astronomy, mechanics, and optics were being treated mathematically, but a qualitative experimental physics remained, dealing especially with so-called 'imponderable fluids' such as heat, electricity, and magnetism. During the 18th century physics concentrated increasingly on the more fundamental and general properties of matter, other phenomena being dealt with under the disciplines of chemistry, biology, etc. All branches of physics were treated mathematically during the 19th century and by 1900 the structure of classical physics, describing the properties of matter on the macroscopic scale and at relatively low velocities, was largely complete. Since that time, however, the theories of modern physics, and in particular relativity, quantum theory, and the physics of atomic and subatomic particles, have transformed our overall understanding of the universe.

physiocrat /ˈfɪzɪəˌkræt/ n. a member of an 18th-century group of French economists founded by Louis XV's physician François Quesnay (1694–1774) and regarded as constituting the first scientific school of economics. In opposition to the theories of mercantilism, the physiocrats held that agriculture, rather than manufacturing or trade, was the source of all wealth and that agricultural products should be highly priced. Advocating adherence to physiocracy, a supposed natural order of social institutions, they stressed the necessity of free trade and coined the term laissez-faire. □ physiocratic /ˌfɪzɪəˈkrætɪk/ adj. [f. as PHYSIOCRACY]

Piaf /ˈpiːæf/, Edith (born Edith Giovanna Gassion) (1915–63), French singer. She acquired her name in 1935, when a cabaret impresario called her la môme piaf (= little sparrow), referring to her small size. She became known as a cabaret and music-hall singer in the late 1930s, touring Europe and America in the 1940s. She is especially remembered for her defiant and nostalgic songs, some of which she wrote herself, including 'La Vie en rose'. Other songs include 'Je ne regrette rien'.

[It., abbr. of PIANOFORTE]

▪ The piano was developed in Italy in the early 18th century. It superseded the clavichord and harpsichord, having a louder tone than the former and a greater expressive range than the latter. The earliest models were of harpsichord shape, but by about 1860 this was largely replaced by the upright piano. The upright piano, with strings running perpendicularly rather than horizontally, is today more common than the larger, less compact, grand piano, in which the strings run horizontally.

Picasso /pɪˈkæsəʊ/, Pablo (1881–1973), Spanish painter, sculptor, and graphic artist, resident in France from 1904. His prolific inventiveness and technical versatility assured his position as the dominant figure in avant-garde art in the first half of the 20th century. The paintings of Picasso's Blue Period (1901–4) used melancholy blue tones to depict social outsiders. These gave way to his Rose Period (1905–6), in which circus performers were represented in pinks and greys. Les Demoiselles d'Avignon (1907), with its rejection of naturalism and focus on the analysis of form, signalled the emergence of cubism, which he developed with Georges Braque and others from 1908 to 1914. The 1920s and 1930s saw the evolution of a neoclassical figurative style, designs for Diaghilev's Ballets Russes, and the evolution of semi-surrealist paintings using increasingly violent imagery, notably The Three Dancers (1935) and Guernica (1937), his response to the destruction of the Basque capital by German bombers.

Piccadilly /ˌpɪkəˈdɪlɪ/ a street in central London, extending from Hyde Park eastwards to Piccadilly Circus. It is noted for its fashionable shops, hotels, and restaurants. The name was originally applied to a house, Pickadilly Hall, thought to be named from the obsolete word 'piccadil' (= a decorative border inserted on the edge of an article of dress), either because piccadils were manufactured there or because houses built there were on the outskirts of the developed area in the 16th century.

Piero della Francesca /ˌpjeərəu ˌdelə frænˈtʃeskə/ (1416–92), Italian painter. He worked in a number of cities, including Florence and Arezzo, and was influenced by the work of Masaccio and Uccello. He used perspective, proportion, and geometrical relationships to create ordered and harmonious pictures in which the figures appear to inhabit real space. He is best known as a fresco painter, and among his major works is a fresco cycle in Arezzo depicting the story of the True Cross (begun 1452). After a long period of neglect his work was regarded more favourably in the 20th century.

piezoelectricity /paɪˌiːzəʊˌɪlekˈtrɪsɪtɪ, -ˌelekˈtrɪsɪtɪ/ n. Physics electric polarization in a substance resulting from the application of mechanical stress, esp. in certain crystals. (See note below.) □ piezoelectric /-ɪˈlektrɪk/ adj. piezoelectrically adv. [Gk piezō press + ELECTRICITY]

- Piezoelectricity was discovered by Pierre Curie and his brother in 1880. The converse effect, in which a voltage applied to such a material causes a mechanical deformation, also occurs. These effects are of great practical importance because piezoelectric substances are able to convert mechanical signals (such as sound waves) into electrical signals, and vice versa. They are therefore widely used in microphones, gramophone pick-ups, earphones, etc. They can also be made to resonate very accurately at a fixed frequency, and as such form the basis of accurate time-keeping devices such as quartz clocks.

Pirandello /ˌpɪrən'deləʊ/, Luigi (1867–1936), Italian dramatist and novelist. His plays challenged the conventions of naturalism and had a significant influence on the development of European drama, anticipating the anti-illusionist theatre of Brecht. Of his ten plays the best known include Six Characters in Search of an Author (1921) and Henry IV (1922). Among his novels are The Outcast (1901) and The Late Mattia Pascal (1904). He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1934.

Piranesi /ˌpɪrə'neɪzɪ/, Giovanni Battista (1720–78), Italian engraver. His interest in classical Roman architecture is reflected in his prints, in which he relied on atypical viewpoints and dramatic chiaroscuro to aggrandize its power and scale. His Prisons (1745–61) extended this imagery into the realms of fantasy, producing a nightmare vision of claustrophobic space and endless dimensions that prefigured later romantic concerns.

Pisa /ˈpiːzə/ a city in northern Italy, in Tuscany, on the River Arno; pop. (1990) 101,500. Formerly situated on the coast, it was an important Etruscan town and a naval base in Roman times, becoming a powerful maritime city-state in the Middle Ages. It now lies about 10 km (6 miles) inland, as a result of the silting of the Arno. The city is noted for the 'Leaning Tower of Pisa', a circular bell-tower which leans about 5 m (17 ft) from the perpendicular over its height of 55 m (181 ft), part of this inclination dating from its construction at the end of the 12th century.

Pitt^1 /pɪt/, William (known as Pitt the Elder), 1st Earl of Chatham (1708–78), British Whig statesman. He became Secretary of State (effectively Prime Minister) in 1756 and headed coalition governments 1756–61 and 1766–8. He brought the Seven Years War to an end in 1763 by using a successful maritime strategy to defeat France. He also masterminded the conquest of French possessions overseas, particularly in Canada and India.

Pitt^2 /pɪt/, William (known as Pitt the Younger) (1759–1806), British statesman, Prime Minister 1783–1801 and 1804–6. The son of Pitt the Elder, he became Prime Minister at the age of 24, the youngest ever to hold this office. He restored the authority of Parliament, introduced financial reforms, reduced the enormous national debt he had inherited, and reformed the administration of India. With Britain's entry into war against France (1793), Pitt became almost entirely occupied with the conduct of the war and with uniting European opposition to France. Having secured the Union of Great Britain and Ireland in 1800, he resigned in 1801 over the issue of Catholic Emancipation (which George III refused to accept). He returned as Premier in 1804 after hostilities with France had been resumed, and died in office.

plainchant /'pleɪntʃɑːnt/ n. = PLAINSONG.

Plains Indian n. a member of any of various North American Indian peoples who formerly inhabited the Great Plains area. Although a few of the Plains Indian peoples were sedentary farmers, most, including the Blackfoot, Cheyenne, and Comanche, were nomadic buffalo hunters, who gathered in tribes during the summer and dispersed into family groups in the winter. They hunted on foot until they acquired horses from the Spanish in the early 18th century. The introduction of the horse also led to other peoples, such as the Sioux and the Cree, moving into the Plains area.

plainsman /'pleɪnzmən/ n. (pl. -men) a person who lives on a plain, esp. in North America.

Plains of Abraham a plateau beside the city of Quebec, overlooking the St Lawrence River. It was the scene in 1759 of a decisive battle in which the British army under General Wolfe, having scaled the heights above the city under cover of darkness, surprised and defeated the French. The battle led to British control over Canada, but both Wolfe and the French commander Montcalm died of their wounds.

plainsong /ˈpleɪnsɒŋ/ n. traditional church music in medieval modes and in free rhythm depending on accentuation of the words, sung in unison, with a single line of vocal melody to words taken from the liturgy. (See also GREGORIAN CHANT.)

plaint /pleɪnt/ n. 1 Brit. Law an accusation; a charge. 2 literary or archaic a complaint; a lamentation. [ME f. OF plainte fem. past part. of plaindre, and OF plaint f. L planctus (as PLAIN^2)] plait /plæt/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a length of hair, straw, etc., in three or more interlaced strands. 2 = PLEAT. ● v.tr. 1 form (hair etc.) into a plait. 2 make (a belt, mat, etc.) by plaiting. [ME f. OF pleit fold ult. f. L plicare fold] plan /plæn/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a a formulated and esp. detailed method by which a thing is to be done; a design or scheme. b an intention or proposed proceeding (my plan was to distract them; plan of campaign). 2 a drawing or diagram made by projection on a horizontal plane, esp. showing a building or one floor of a building (cf. ELEVATION 3). 3 a fairly large-scale map of a town or district. 4 a a table etc. indicating times, places, etc. of intended proceedings. b a diagram of an arrangement (prepared the seating plan). 5 an imaginary plane perpendicular to the line of vision and containing the objects shown in a picture. ● v. (planned, planning) 1 tr. (often foll. by that + clause or to + infin.) arrange (a procedure etc.) beforehand; form a plan (planned to catch the evening ferry). 2 tr. a design (a building, new town, etc.). b make a plan of (an existing building, an area, etc.). 3 tr. (as planned adj.) in accordance with a plan (his planned arrival; planned parenthood). 4 intr. make plans. □ planned economy (esp. in (former) Communist countries) an economy in which prices, incomes, etc., are determined centrally by government rather than through the operation of the free market, and in which industrial production is governed by an overall national plan (also called command economy). planning permission Brit. formal permission for building development etc., esp. from a local authority. plan on aim at doing or having; intend. □ planning n. [F f. earlier plant, f. It. pianta plan of building: cf. PLANT] planar /ˈpleɪnə(r)/ adj. Math. of, relating to, or in the form of a plane.

planarian /pləˈneərɪən/ n. Zool. a turbellarian flatworm of the division Tricladida, usu. living in fresh water. [mod.L Planaria genus name, fem. of L planarius lying flat] planchet /ˈplænʃɪt/ n. a plain metal disc from which a coin is made. [dimin. of planch slab of metal f. OF planche: see PLANK] planchette /plɑːnˈʃet/ n. a small usu. heart-shaped board on castors with a pencil, said to trace letters etc. at spiritualist seances without conscious direction when one or more persons rest their fingers lightly on the board. [F, dimin. of planche PLANK]

Planck /plæŋk/, Max (Karl Ernst Ludwig) (1858–1947), German theoretical physicist, who founded the quantum theory. He published fundamental papers on thermodynamics before taking up the problem of black-body radiation. In 1900 he announced his radiation law, according to which electromagnetic radiation from heated bodies was not emitted as a continuous flow but was made up of discrete units or quanta of energy, the size of which involved a fundamental physical constant (Planck's constant). The quantum concept was immediately used to explain atomic structure and the photoelectric effect. Planck was awarded the 1918 Nobel Prize for physics. (See also QUANTUM.)

Planck's constant n. (also Planck constant) a fundamental constant, equal to the energy of quanta of electromagnetic radiation divided by its frequency, with a value of 6.626×10^{-34} joules. [PLANCK] plane^1 /pleɪn/ n., adj., & v. ● n. 1 a a flat surface on which a straight line joining any two points on it would wholly lie. b an imaginary flat surface through or joining etc. material objects. 2 a level surface. 3 colloq. = AEROPLANE. 4 a flat surface producing lift by the action of air or water over and under it (usu. in comb.: hydroplane). 5 (often foll. by of) a level of attainment, thought, knowledge, etc. 6 a flat thin object such as a tabletop. ● adj. 1 (of a surface etc.) perfectly level. 2 (of an angle, figure, etc.) lying in a plane. ● v.intr. 1 (often foll. by down) travel or glide in an aeroplane. 2 (of a speedboat etc.) skim over water. 3 soar. □ plane chart a chart on which meridians and parallels of latitude are represented by equidistant straight lines, used in plane sailing. plane polarization a process restricting the vibrations of electromagnetic radiation, esp. light, to one direction. plane sailing 1 the practice of determining a ship's position on the theory that it is moving on a plane. 2 = plain sailing (see PLAIN^1). plane-table a surveying instrument used for direct plotting in the field, with a circular drawing-board and pivoted alidade. [L planum flat surface, neut. of planus PLAIN^1 (differentiated f. PLAIN^1 in 17th c.): adj. after F plan, plane]

plane^2 /pleɪn/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a tool consisting of a wooden or metal block with a projecting steel blade, used to smooth a wooden surface by paring shavings from it. 2 a similar tool for smoothing metal. ● v.tr. 1 smooth (wood, metal, etc.) with a plane. 2 (often foll. by away, down) pare (irregularities) with a plane. 3 archaic level (plane the way). [ME f. OF var. of plaine f. LL plana f. L planus PLAIN^1] plane^3 /pleɪn/ n. (in full plane tree) a tall tree of the genus Platanus, with maple-like leaves and bark which peels in uneven patches. (See also LONDON PLANE.) [ME f. OF f. L platanus f. Gk platanos f. platus broad] planet /ˈplænɪt/ n. 1 a a celestial body moving in an elliptical orbit round a star. (See note below.) b the earth. 2 esp. Astrol. & hist. a celestial body distinguished from the fixed stars by having an apparent motion of its own (including the moon and sun), esp. with reference to its supposed influence on people and events. □ planetology /ˌplænɪˈtɒlədʒɪ/ n. [ME f. OF planete f. LL planeta, planetes f. Gk planētēs wanderer, planet f. planaomai wander]

▪ The nine planets of the solar system are either gas giants or smaller rocky bodies. The former comprise Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, all of which have dense atmospheres of hydrogen-rich gases subject to violent winds and eddies. They are orbited both by retinues of satellites (some as large as the other planets), and by concentric rings composed of small particles. Of the rocky planets — Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, and Pluto — only Earth and Venus have substantial atmospheres. Only Earth has significant amounts of surface water today, and it is the only planet known to support life. The minor planets or asteroids orbit mainly between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. Planetary systems are probably a common phenomenon in the universe; several stars, notably Vega and Beta Pictoris, are surrounded by discs of matter, and since 1995 apparent planetary objects have been detected in orbit around a number of others through their gravitational effects on the parent stars. (See also SOLAR SYSTEM.)

planetarium /ˌplænɪˈteərɪəm/ n. (pl. planetariums or planetaria /-rɪə/) 1 a domed building in which images of stars, planets, constellations, etc. are projected for public entertainment or education. 2 the device used for such projection. 3 = ORRERY. [mod.L (as PLANET)]

planetary /ˈplænɪtərɪ/ adj. 1 of or like planets (planetary influence). 2 terrestrial; mundane. 3 wandering; erratic. □ planetary nebula Astron. a ring-shaped nebula formed by an expanding shell of gas round an ageing star. [LL planetarius (as PLANET)] planetesimal /ˌplænɪˈtesɪm(ə)l/ n. Astron. any of a vast number of minute planets or planetary bodies. □ planetesimal hypothesis the theory that planets were formed by the accretion of planetesimals in a cold state. [PLANET, after infinitesimal] planetoid /ˈplænɪˌtɔɪd/ n. = ASTEROID.

plangent /ˈplændʒ(ə)nt/ adj. 1 (of a sound) loud and reverberating. 2 (of a sound) plaintive; sad. □ plangency n. [L plangere plangent- lament] planimeter /pləˈnɪmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for mechanically measuring the area of a plane figure. □ planimetry n. planimetric /ˌplænɪˈmetrɪk/ adj. planimetrical adj. [F planimètre f. L planus level]

planisphere /ˈplænɪˌsfɪə(r)/ n. a map formed by the projection of a sphere or part of a sphere on a plane, esp. an adjustable circular star map that shows the appearance of the heavens at a specific time and place. □ planispheric /ˌplænɪˈsferɪk/ adj. [ME f. med.L planisphaerium (as PLANE^1, SPHERE): infl. by F planisphère] plank /plæŋk/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a long flat piece of timber used esp. in building, flooring, etc. 2 an item of a political or other programme (cf. PLATFORM 6). ● v.tr. 1 provide, cover, or floor, with planks. 2 (usu. foll. by down; also absol.) esp. US colloq. a put (a thing, person, etc.) down roughly or violently. b pay (money) on the spot or abruptly (planked down £5). □ plank bed a bed of boards without a mattress, esp. in prison. walk the plank hist. (of a pirate's captive etc.) be made to walk blindfold along a plank over the side of a ship to one's death in the sea. [ME f. ONF planke, OF planche f. LL planca board f. plancus flat-footed] planking /'plæŋkɪŋ/ n. planks as flooring etc.

plankton /'plæŋktən/ n. Biol. the small and microscopic organisms drifting or floating in the sea or fresh water (cf. BENTHOS, NEKTON). □ planktonic /plæŋk'tɒnɪk/ adj. [G f. Gk plagktos wandering f. plazomai wander] planner /'plænə(r)/ n. 1 a person who controls or plans the development of new towns, designs buildings, etc. 2 a person who makes plans. 3 a list, table, etc., with information helpful in planning.

plano- /'pleɪnəʊ/ comb. form level, flat. [L planus flat] planoconcave /ˌpleɪnəʊ'kɒŋkeɪv/ adj. (of a lens etc.) with one surface plane and the other concave.

planoconvex /ˌpleɪnəʊ'kɒnveks/ adj. (of a lens etc.) with one surface plane and the other convex.

planographic /ˌpleɪnə'græfɪk/ adj. relating to or produced by a process in which printing is done from a plane surface. □ planography /plə'nɒgrəfɪ/ n.

planometer /plə'nɒmɪtə(r)/ n. a flat plate used as a gauge for plane surfaces in metalwork.

plant /plɑːnt/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a a living organism which usu. contains chlorophyll, and lacks specialized sense-organs and the power of voluntary movement. (See note below.) b a small organism of this kind, as distinguished from a shrub or tree. 2 a machinery, fixtures, etc., used in industrial processes. b a factory. 3 a colloq. something, esp. incriminating or compromising, positioned or concealed so as to be discovered later. b sl. a spy or detective; hidden police officers. ● v.tr. 1 place (a seed, bulb, or growing thing) in the ground so that it may take root and flourish. 2 (often foll. by in, on, etc.) a put or fix in position. b refl. take up a position (planted myself by the door). c place (a bomb) in a building etc. 3 deposit (young fish, spawn, oysters, etc.) in a river or lake. 4 station (a person etc.), esp. as a spy or source of information. 5 cause (an idea etc.) to be established esp. in another person's mind. 6 deliver (a blow, kiss, etc.) with a deliberate aim. 7 colloq. position or conceal (something incriminating or compromising) for later discovery. 8 a settle or people (a colony etc.). b found or establish (a city, community, etc.). 9 bury. □ plant-louse a small homopteran bug that infests plants, esp. an aphid. plant out transfer (a plant) from a pot or frame to the open ground; set out (seedlings) at intervals. □ plantable adj. plantlet /'plɑːntlɪt/ n. plantlike adj. [OE plante & F plante f. L planta sprout, slip, cutting]

▪ The possession of chlorophyll enables plants to synthesize organic molecules with the aid of sunlight, enabling them to live on inorganic substances. The plant kingdom (Plantae) was formerly held to include fungi and bacteria as well as green plants. Now, however, these two groups, along with unicellular algae, are frequently assigned to separate kingdoms, and the plant kingdom is restricted to the multicellular green plants. The main groups of these are the multicellular algae, mosses, ferns, gymnosperms, and angiosperms (flowering plants).

Plantagenet /plæn'tædʒɪnɪt/ the English royal dynasty which held the throne from the accession of Henry II (1154) to the death of Richard III (1485). Plantagenet originated as the nickname of Geoffrey IV, Count of Anjou (1113–51), father of Henry II of England, probably deriving from the sprig of broom worn as a distinctive mark. In the 15th century the line divided into two branches, the House of Lancaster and the House of York (see WARS OF THE ROSES). [L planta plant, genista broom] plantain^{1} /'plæntɪn/ n. a low-growing plant of the genus Plantago, with usu. broad flat leaves forming a rosette on the ground, and seeds used as food for birds and as a mild laxative. □ plantain lily = HOSTA. [ME f. OF f. L plantago -ginis f. planta sole of the foot (from its broad prostrate leaves)] plantain^{2} /'plæntɪn/ n. 1 a banana-like plant, Musa paradisiaca, widely grown for its fruit. 2 the starchy fruit of this, containing less sugar than a dessert banana, and chiefly used in cooking. [earlier platan f. Sp. plá(n)tano plane tree, prob. assim. f. Galibi palatana etc.]

plasma /'plæzmə/ n. (also plasm /-z(ə)m/) 1 a the colourless fluid part of blood, lymph, or milk, in which corpuscles or fat-globules are suspended. b this taken from donated blood for administering in transfusions. 2 = PROTOPLASM. 3 Physics a an electrically conducting gas of positive ions and free negative electrons, often electrically neutral overall, formed especially at very high temperatures. (See note below.) b any analogous collection of mobile charged particles. 4 a green variety of quartz used in mosaic and for other decorative purposes. □ plasmic adj. plasmatic /plæz'mætɪk/ adj. [LL, = mould f. Gk plasma -atos f. plassō to shape]

▪ Examples of hot plasmas are the ionized gases found in the sun and other stars, and in artificial nuclear fusion reactions, glowing electrical discharges, and the gaseous interior of working fluorescent lamps. Such plasmas behave differently from ordinary gases, notably in being affected by magnetic fields. For this reason they are sometimes regarded as constituting a fourth state of matter alongside solids, liquids, and gases. Examples of plasmas in the broader sense include molten salts and the mobile electrons within metals. The study of plasmas is very important for developing controlled nuclear fusion reactions, in which the fuel becomes a plasma hot enough to vaporize any container; the development of magnetic containment systems is seen as the potential solution to the key problem of how to contain the reacting materials.

plasmid /'plæzmɪd/ n. Biol. a genetic structure in a cell that can replicate independently of the chromosomes, esp. a circular strand of DNA in a bacterium or protozoan. [PLASMA + -ID^{2}] plasmodesma /ˌplæzmə'dezmə/ n. (pl. plasmodesmata /-mətə/) Biol. a narrow thread of membrane-bound cytoplasm that passes through cell walls and affords communication between plant cells. [PLASMA + Gk desma bond, fetter] plasmodium /plæz'məʊdɪəm/ n. (pl. plasmodia /-dɪə/) Biol. 1 a parasitic protozoan of the genus Plasmodium, including several causing malaria in humans. 2 a form within the life cycle of various micro-organisms including slime moulds, usu. consisting of a mass of naked protoplasm containing many nuclei. □ plasmodial adj. [mod.L f. - Plastics consist of long chain-like organic molecules (polymers) intertwined with one another. The first plastics, such as celluloid (developed in 1869), used chemically modified forms of cellulose or other natural polymers. In the 20th century, however, polymers made artificially from small molecules became available, leading to the great diversity of plastics available today. The structure of plastics allows them to be softened during manufacture, and thus they can be moulded into many different forms. Other advantages of plastics include toughness, insulating ability, resistance to chemical and biological attack (although this leads to environmental problems), and ability to be given any desired colour. Among the major successes of the plastics industry are celluloid, bakelite (the first heat-proof plastic), polythene, and nylon.

plate tectonics n. Geol. a theory of the earth's surface based on the motion and interaction of rigid lithospheric plates (PLATE n. 13). The plates, some of which are large enough to include a whole continent, lie on top of the more plastic region of the earth's mantle and move slowly relative to each other under the influence of convection currents. The boundaries between adjacent plates are regions of seismic, volcanic, and tectonic activity. Plate tectonics, which since the 1960s has revolutionized geology, provides explanations for the phenomenon of continental drift and the distribution of earthquakes, mid-ocean ridges, deep-sea trenches, and mountain chains. (See also CONTINENTAL DRIFT.)

platform /ˈplætfɔːm/ n. 1 a raised level surface; a natural or artificial terrace. 2 a raised surface from which a speaker addresses an audience. 3 Brit. a raised elongated structure along the side of a track in a railway station. 4 the floor area at the entrance to a bus. 5 a a thick sole of a shoe. b a shoe with such a sole. 6 the declared policy of a political party, organization, etc. (cf. [earlier platina f. Sp., dimin. of plata silver]

- Platinum was first encountered by the Spanish in America in the 16th century. A transition metal, it occurs in nature in the uncombined state and in ores, always with other metals. It has a high melting-point and is resistant to chemical attack. The pure metal and its alloys are used in jewellery, electrical contacts, and laboratory equipment, and it is an important industrial catalyst.

Plato /ˈpleɪtəʊ/ (*c.*429–*c.*347 BC), Greek philosopher. He was a disciple of Socrates and the teacher of Aristotle, and he founded the Academy in Athens. His system of thought had a profound influence on Christian theology and Western philosophy. His philosophical writings, which cover metaphysics, politics, and ethics, are presented in the form of dialogues, with Socrates as the principal speaker; they include the Symposium and the Phaedo. An integral part of his thought is the theory of 'ideas' or 'forms', in which abstract entities or universals are contrasted with their objects or particulars in the material world. Plato's political theories appear in the Republic, in which he explored the nature and structure of a just society. He proposed a political system based on the division of the population into three classes, determined by education rather than birth or wealth: rulers, police and armed forces, and civilians.

Plautus /ˈplɔːtəs/, Titus Maccius (*c.*250–184 BC), Roman comic dramatist. His plays, of which twenty-one survive, are modelled on the New Comedy of Greek dramatists such as Menander, but with a few important differences. Fantasy and imagination are more important than realism in the development of the plots, for example; his stock characters, which follow Greek types, are often larger than life and their language is correspondingly exuberant.

playing card /ˈpleɪɪŋ ˌkɑːd/ n. each of a set of usu. fifty-two oblong pieces of card or other material with an identical pattern on one side and different values represented by numbers and symbols on the other, divided into four suits, used to play various games. The origin of playing cards is uncertain. They were not known to Graeco-Roman antiquity, and though it has been argued that they reached Europe from the Far East, European and Asian cards are so different that there may not be a common origin. They have been in use in Europe since the 14th century and in the East for at least as long. From the 14th century the various suit systems were becoming established in different parts of Europe. The standard pack now contains fifty-two cards divided into four suits of thirteen cards each. Each suit has an ace, nine cards numbered 2 to 10, and three picture or 'court cards' (jack or knave, queen, and king); the pack used in Britain also includes a joker. The signs of the four suits reached England from France in about the 15th century; since then no major change has been made in the composition of the pack, and figures on the court cards are still represented in the costume of Henry VII's reign. 2 Astron. the ninth planet from the sun in the solar system, orbiting at an average distance of 5,900 million km from the sun. (See note below.) [L f. Gk Ploutōn]

- Pluto was discovered in 1930 by Clyde Tombaugh, following analysis of perturbations in the orbit of Uranus and Neptune, but it is now known to be too small a body (diameter about 2,250 km) to have produced these effects. Its orbit is more steeply inclined and more eccentric than that of other planets, so that at perihelion Pluto is closer to the sun than Neptune (as in 1979–99). It was discovered in 1978 to have a single satellite, Charon, which is so large that the pair should properly be regarded as a binary system.

Plymouth Brethren n.pl. a fundamentalist Christian Protestant denomination with no formal creed and no official order of ministers, named after its first centre, established in 1830 by John Nelson Darby (1800–82) at Plymouth in Devon. Its teaching combines elements of Calvinism and Pietism, with emphasis on an expected millennium. Of austere outlook, members renounce many secular occupations, allowing only those compatible with New Testament standards. As a result of doctrinal and other differences, a split in 1849 resulted in the formation of the Exclusive Brethren and the Open Brethren.

Poe /pəʊ/, Edgar Allan (1809–49), American short-story writer, poet, and critic. He spent most of his life in poverty and ill health. His fiction and poetry are Gothic in style and characterized by their exploration of the macabre, the fantastic, and the grotesque. His most famous short stories include the Gothic romance 'The Fall of the House of Usher' (which appeared in Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque, 1840) and 'The Pit and the Pendulum' (1843), while his poems include 'The Raven' (1845) and 'Annabel Lee' (1849). His story 'The Murders in the Rue Morgue' (1841) is often regarded as the first detective story in English literature. His critical writings include 'The Poetic Principle' (1850), which anticipated many of the concerns of the Aesthetic Movement.

Poisson /ˈpwʌsɒn/, Siméon-Denis (1781–1840), French mathematical physicist. Early in his career he began applying the integration of differential equations to problems in physics, an approach which he used for many years with great effect. He added to the work of Laplace and Lagrange on planetary motions, and went on to study electrostatics, heat, elasticity, and magnetism. Perhaps his major contributions were in probability theory, in which he greatly improved Laplace's work and developed several concepts that are now named after him.

Poisson distribution n. Statistics a discrete frequency distribution which gives the probability of events occurring in a fixed time. [POISSON]

Poitiers /ˈpwʌtɪˌeɪ/ a city in west central France, the chief town of Poitou-Charentes region and capital of the former province of Poitou; pop. (1990) 82,500. Poland /ˈpəʊlənd/ (called in Polish Polska) a country in central Europe with a coastline on the Baltic Sea; pop. (1990) 38,183,160; official language, Polish; capital, Warsaw. First united as a nation in the 11th century, Poland became a dominant power in the region in the 16th century. Thereafter it suffered severely from the rise of Russian, Swedish, Prussian, and Austrian power, losing territory and eventually its independence in three partitions between 1772 and 1795. Poland regained full independence (as a republic) after the First World War. Its invasion by German forces in 1939 precipitated the Second World War, in which it was at first divided between Germany and the USSR and from which it eventually emerged, with its boundaries displaced westwards, as a Communist state under Soviet domination. In the 1980s, the rise of the independent trade union movement Solidarity eventually led to the end of Communist rule (1989) and the introduction of democratic and free-market reforms under President Lech Wałęsa.

Polanski /pəˈlænskɪ/, Roman (b.1933), French film director of Polish descent. Born in France, he grew up in Poland, where he pursued a career as an actor from the age of 14 and directed the film Knife in the Water (1962), which established his international reputation. He subsequently worked in Hollywood, having success with films such as Rosemary's Baby (1968) and Chinatown (1974). He left the US for France in 1977 under threat of prosecution for drug and sex offences. His later films, including Tess (1979) and Frantic (1988), have not had the success of his earlier titles. His second wife, Hollywood actress Sharon Tate (1943–69), was one of the victims of a multiple murder by followers of the cult leader Charles Manson (b.1934).

- Compared with many countries (where the role of the military was not always sharply distinguished from that of the police), Britain was fairly late in establishing a regular force, the first being that organized in London in 1829 by Sir Robert Peel. From medieval times a petty or parish constable was appointed to preserve the peace in his area and to execute the orders of Justices of the Peace; in towns, the 'watch' patrolled and guarded the streets. In London in the 18th century some justices organized bodies of constables, of which the Bow Street Runners (established in 1749) were one. The modern British police force is not a national one; a number of forces exist for defined areas, maintained by local police authorities, the Home Office being responsible for the London Metropolitan Police. Unlike most other police forces, the British police are not armed except in special circumstances.

Pollock /'polək/, (Paul) Jackson (1912–56), American painter. His earlier work shows the influence of surrealist painters such as Miró, but he later became a leading figure of abstract expressionism and from 1947 onwards developed the style known as action painting. Fixing the canvas to the floor or wall, he poured, splashed, or dripped paint on it, covering the whole canvas and avoiding any point of emphasis in the picture. He often used sticks, trowels, and knives instead of brushes and occasionally mixed the paint with sand or broken glass. He was killed in a car accident; he had earlier been treated for alcoholism and in 1938 suffered a mental breakdown.

pollock var. of POLLACK.

poll tax n. a fixed tax levied on every adult, without reference to their income or resources. Poll taxes are arithmetically simple, but have often been extremely unpopular because they weigh disproportionately heavily on poorer people. Such taxes were levied in England in 1377, 1379, and 1380; the last of these is generally regarded as having contributed to the 1381 Peasants' Revolt. Poll taxes did not appear again in Britain until the introduction of the community charge in place of rates (for local government expenditure) by the Conservative government in 1990 (1989 in Scotland). This tax proved not only very unpopular but also expensive and difficult to administer; it was replaced in 1993 by the council tax. [POLL^1]

▪ The first British Polytechnic Institution (in Regent Street, London) was founded in 1838 by George Cayley and others to provide workers with technical and vocational education. More polytechnics were set up in the late 19th century, and a second generation was instituted in 1966, created largely from existing colleges. These new polytechnics offered degree courses in a wide range of arts and social science subjects in addition to the established scientific and vocational courses, though they continued to differ from universities in that they did not award their own degrees but awarded them through the CNAA. In 1989 they became independent from local education authorities, and from 1992 the CNAA was abolished and the polytechnics were able to call themselves universities.

Pompeii /pɒmˈpeɪɪ/ an ancient city in western Italy, south-east of Naples. The life of the city came to an abrupt end following an eruption of Mount Vesuvius in 79 AD, as described by Pliny the Younger. The city lay buried for centuries beneath several metres of volcanic ash until excavations of the site began in 1748. The well-preserved remains of the city include not only buildings and mosaics but wall-paintings, furniture, graffiti, and the personal possessions of its inhabitants, providing an unusually vivid insight into the life, art, and architecture of the ancient Roman period.

Pompey /ˈpɒmpɪ/ (known as Pompey the Great; Latin name Gnaeus Pompeius Magnus) (106–48 BC), Roman general and statesman. His greatest achievements were the suppression of the Mediterranean pirates (66), and the defeat of Mithridates in the east (63). He formed the First Triumvirate with Caesar and Crassus in 60, but disagreement with Caesar resulted in civil war. Pompey was defeated at the battle of Pharsalus, after which he fled to Egypt, where he was murdered.

Pompidou /ˈpɒmpɪˌduː/, Georges (Jean Raymond) (1911–74), French statesman, Prime Minister 1962–8 and President 1969–74. In 1944 he became an adviser of de Gaulle; when the latter was returned to power in 1959, Pompidou assisted in the drafting of the new constitution. He was instrumental in ending the conflict in Algeria between French forces and nationalist guerrillas. He resigned after criticism of his handling of the strikes and riots of 1968. Pompidou was elected President the following year after de Gaulle's resignation; he died in office.

Pompidou Centre a modern art gallery, exhibition centre, and concert hall in Paris, designed by the British architect Sir Richard Rogers and the Italian Renzo Piano (b.1937) and opened in 1977. poorhouse /ˈpʊəhaʊs, ˈpɔːhaʊs/ n. hist. = WORKHOUSE 1.

Poor Law n. any of various laws relating to the support of the poor in England. In the 16th century legislation placed the responsibility for the relief of the unemployed, infirm, and disabled on the parish, and levied a compulsory rate for the provision of funds; a statute of 1576 also stipulated that work should be organized for the able-bodied poor. By the late 18th century there was a system to supplement the wages of low-paid workers with parish allowances; the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 sought to end this type of outdoor relief by ensuring that relief was given either through the harsh regime of workhouses (for the 'deserving poor') or through that of the even harsher houses of correction (for the 'undeserving poor'). The system proved both repressive and, with increasing urbanization during the 19th century, unable to cope with demand. In the early 20th century the Poor Law was dismantled and replaced by schemes of social security.

Pope /pəʊp/, Alexander (1688–1744), English poet. He was a major figure of the Augustan period in England, famous for his caustic wit and metrical skill, in particular his use of the heroic couplet. His Essay on Criticism (1711), a poem on the art of writing, drew him to the attention of Addison's literary circle; he later associated with Jonathan Swift, John Gay, and others. Among Pope's other major works are the mock-heroic The Rape of the Lock (1712; enlarged 1714), the philosophical poem An Essay on Man (1733–4), and the Epistle to Dr Arbuthnot (1735), a fierce and ironic attack on his critics. He published an edition of Shakespeare's plays (1725) which was criticized for inaccuracies by the scholar Lewis Theobald (1688–1744); Pope retaliated by making Theobald the hero of his satire attacking 'Dulness', The Dunciad (1728). Pope also made notable translations of the Iliad (1715–20) and the Odyssey (1726).

PAPA]

- In the Western Church pope is today a title given only to the bishop of Rome as head of the Roman Catholic Church, but in the early Church it was applied to bishops generally, becoming confined to the Roman official from about the 9th century; in the Eastern or Orthodox Church priests, and the patriarch of Alexandria, are known by the title (see POPE^2). Elected by the College of Cardinals, the pope derives his authority from being regarded as the direct successor of St Peter, the leader of the Apostles and the first bishop of Rome. The pope formerly had great political power, particularly during the Middle Ages, as ruler of the Papal States; today papal sovereignty is restricted to the Vatican City.

Popper /ˈpopə(r)/, Sir Karl Raimund (1902–94), Austrian-born British philosopher. He was originally associated with the Vienna Circle, but was highly critical of the emphasis placed by logical positivism on verification. In The Logic of Scientific Discovery (1934) he posits instead that scientific hypotheses can never be finally confirmed as true and are acceptable only in so far as they manage to survive frequent attempts to falsify them. He is also known for his criticism of the historicist social theories of Plato, Hegel, and Marx, as, for example, in The Open Society and its Enemies (1945). He left Vienna on Hitler's rise to power and eventually settled in England, where he was a professor at the London School of Economics (1949–69).

popular music n. music appealing to the popular taste, esp. as opposed to classical, jazz, or folk music. The origins of popular music may be traced back to the 18th century, when hymns, folk-tunes, and songs from ballad operas were first published in sheet-music form. The 19th century saw the popularity in Britain of the music-hall; in the US popular songs included those written by Stephen Foster. In the early 20th century the invention of sound recording assisted the spread of ragtime, early jazz, and the songs of Tin Pan Alley beyond the US, while radio and gramophone popularized country music, big-band jazz, and blues from the late 1940s, and then rock and roll from the mid-1950s. Amplification of singing and frequently of instrumentation was by then usual. In recent years technology has become increasingly sophisticated and popular music is now an important industry, yet its basis is still the short, concise song. In the past decade the ubiquity of rock and pop among white audiences has been challenged by various forms of black music, such as reggae, rap, and house music, and world music. (See also ROCK MUSIC, COUNTRY MUSIC, FOLK MUSIC, JAZZ, etc.)

Portugal /'pɔːtjʊg(ə)l, 'pɔːtʃʊ-/ a country occupying the western part of the Iberian peninsula in SW Europe; pop. (est. 1991) 10,393,000; official language, Portuguese; capital, Lisbon. In Roman times the region formed the province of Lusitania; the country's history was linked with that of Spain until it became an independent kingdom under Alfonso I (*c.*1073–1134) in the 12th century. Dynastic disputes with the Spanish kingdoms to the east resulted in the formation of Portugal's long-standing alliance with England in the 14th century, and in the following two hundred years it emerged as one of the leading European colonial powers. Independence was lost to Philip II of Spain in 1580 and not regained until 1688. Portugal became a republic in 1911, after the expulsion of the monarchy. A long period of dictatorship by Antonio Salazar (Prime Minister 1932–68), and his successor Marcello Caetano (1906–80), was ended in 1974 by a coup by army officers opposed to continuing colonial wars in Angola and Mozambique. This led to Portugal's rapid withdrawal from its African colonies and eventually to democratic reform. Portugal became a member of the EEC in 1986.

[F poste (fem.) f. It. posta ult. f. L ponere posit- place]

- The term post was applied from the beginning of the 16th century to men with horses stationed or posted at suitable distances along main routes, the duty of each being to take or despatch to the next stage the monarch's mail, and subsequently also other people's letters, as well as to provide horses for use in this. Corresponding terms in French and Italian are used by Marco Polo of the stations, 40 kilometres (25 miles) apart, at which the messengers of the emperor of China changed horses. In 18th-century England stagecoaches carried the mail, succeeded in the mid-19th century by the railways. In 1840 the 'penny post' was introduced, and similar developments in other countries led to the establishment of a Postal Union in 1874 which stimulated the development of international mail services. The first regular airmail service (London–Paris) was introduced in 1919. Since the 1960s there have been improvements in sorting in Britain and elsewhere with the introduction of postcodes and electronic technology. (See also PENNY POST, STAMP.)

post-modern /pəʊst'mɒd(ə)n/ adj. (in literature, architecture, the arts, etc.) of or relating to post-modernism.

post-modernism /pəʊst'mɒdəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. a style and concept in the arts, architecture, and criticism, dating from the late 20th century, which represents a departure from modernism and has at its heart a general distrust of grand theories and ideologies as well as a problematical relationship with any notion of 'art'. Typical features include a deliberate mixing of different artistic styles and media, the self-conscious use of earlier styles and conventions, and often the incorporation of images relating to the consumerism and mass communication of modern post-industrial society. Post-modernist architecture was pioneered by Robert Venturi; the AT&T skyscraper in New York (completed in 1984) is a prime example of the style. Influential literary critics include Jean Baudrillard (b.1929) and Jean-François Lyotard (1924–98). □ post-modernist adj. & n.

post-structuralism /pəʊst'strʌktʃərəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. a school of thought representing an extension and critique of structuralism, which emerged in French intellectual life in the late 1960s and early 1970s. It embraced various standpoints, including the philosophical deconstruction of Jacques Derrida and the later work of Roland Barthes, the psychoanalytic theories of Jacques Lacan and Julia Kristeva (b.1941), the historical critiques of Michel Foucault, and the writings in culture and politics of figures such as Jean-François Lyotard (1924–98) and Jean Baudrillard (b.1929). It departed from the claims to objectivity and comprehensiveness made by structuralism and emphasized instead plurality and deferral of meaning, rejecting the fixed binary oppositions of structuralism and the validity of authorial authority. After initially being influential in France, it subsequently became important in Britain, the US, and elsewhere in the late 1970s and 1980s. □ post-structural adj. post-structuralist adj. & n.

Potter^{1} /ˈpotə(r)/, Dennis (Christopher George) (1935–94), English television dramatist. He began suffering from a crippling form of psoriasis in the 1960s, after which he wrote his most acclaimed works, the series Pennies from Heaven (1978) and The Singing Detective (1986). Both use popular songs of the 1920s and 1930s to contrast the humdrum or painful realities of everyday life with the imagination's capacity for hope and self-delusion. Other plays include Blue Remembered Hills (1979), in which adults played the parts of children, and the controversial Brimstone and Treacle (1976).

Potter^{2} /ˈpotə(r)/, (Helen) Beatrix (1866–1943), English writer for children. She is known for her series of animal stories, illustrated with her own delicate watercolours, which began with The Tale of Peter Rabbit (first published privately in 1900).

- The shaping and baking of clay vessels is among the oldest and most widely practised of all the crafts: earthenware pottery dating from about 9,000 years ago has been found on the Anatolian plateau of Turkey. At first it was shaped entirely by hand, and many centuries passed before the introduction of the potter's wheel. The brilliant achievements of the Chinese and their neighbours, especially in the field of glazed stoneware and porcelain, were almost unknown in Europe until the opening up of the direct sea route in the 16th century, though these wares were not without influence on the Islamic pottery of the Near East. In medieval times pottery was little used at table but by the 18th century there was an immense demand for table and ornamental wares of all kinds, and new factories appeared in many countries. Notable were those at Sèvres in France and Meissen in Germany, while Josiah Wedgwood's establishment of a factory in Staffordshire led to that area becoming the pottery centre of Britain. The Industrial Revolution saw technical and practical innovations which culminated in the change from craft to industry, although the craft of the individual potter has recently undergone something of a revival. The main divisions in pottery are often given as earthenware, porcelain, and stoneware.

Pound /paʊnd/, Ezra (Weston Loomis) (1885–1972), American poet and critic. He came to Europe in 1908 and co-founded the imagist movement in London; collections of poetry from this period include Ripostes (1912). He also co-edited the magazine of the vorticist movement, Blast, from 1914 to 1915. After this he gradually moved away from imagism and began to develop a highly eclectic poetic voice, drawing on a vast range of classical and other references, which ensured his reputation as one of the foremost modernist poets. Work from this later period includes Hugh Selwyn Mauberley (1920) and the long (unfinished) series of Cantos (1917–70). In 1925 he settled in Italy; he was charged with treason in 1945 following his pro-Fascist radio broadcasts during the Second World War, but adjudged insane and committed to a mental institution until 1958.

Powell[1] /ˈpəʊəl/, Anthony (Dymoke) (1905–2000), English novelist. He was best known for his sequence of twelve novels, A Dance to the Music of Time, beginning with A Question of Upbringing (1951) and ending with Hearing Secret Harmonies (1975). These novels are a satirical and panoramic portrayal of the fortunes of the English upper middle classes between the First and Second World Wars.

Powell[2] /ˈpaʊəl/, (John) Enoch (1912–98), British politician. He was a classical scholar before the Second World War, joining the Conservative Party in 1946. After serving as Minister of Health (1960–3), he attracted public attention in 1968 with his frank condemnation of multiracial immigration into Britain; as a result he was dismissed from the shadow Cabinet. Powell also opposed British entry into the Common Market, resigning from the Conservative Party in 1974 on this issue. He later served as an Ulster Unionist MP (1974–87).

Prague /prɑːg/ (Czech Praha /ˈpraha/) the capital of the Czech Republic, in the north-east on the River Vltava; pop. (1991) 1,212,000. The Bohemian king and Holy Roman emperor Charles IV made it the capital of Bohemia in the 14th century. It was the scene of religious conflict in the early 15th century between the followers of John Huss and the Catholic Church, and again in the 17th century when, in response to the oppression of the ruling Catholic Habsburgs, the Protestant citizens threw Catholic officials from the windows of Hradčany Castle. This event, known as the Defenestration of Prague (1618), contributed to the outbreak of the Thirty Years War. Prague was the capital of Czechoslovakia from 1918 until the partition of the country at the beginning of 1993.

Prague Spring the attempted democratization of Czech political life in 1968. The movement was crushed when Soviet troops moved into Czechoslovakia in August of that year.

Precambrian /priːˈkæmbrɪən/ adj. & n. Geol. of, relating to, or denoting the earliest geological era, preceding the Palaeozoic. The Precambrian includes the whole of the earth's history from its origin about 4,600 million years ago to the beginning of the Cambrian period about 590 million years ago. Fossils of animals with hard skeletons are absent from Precambrian rocks, and the era was once thought devoid of organic life, but it is now known that a variety of organisms did exist during that time. The oldest known Precambrian rocks are about 3,800 million years old. (cf. ARCHAEAN, PROTEROZOIC) prehistory /priː'hɪstərɪ/ n. the period before written records. The prehistoric era is conventionally divided into Stone Age, Bronze Age, and Iron Age periods, on the basis of the material used for weapons and tools. Originally devised by the Danish museum curator Christian Thomsen (1788–1865), the system was later elaborated and refined, and was confirmed (at least for European areas) by stratification of finds; however, it is neither a guide to absolute dates nor an essential evolutionary sequence, since not all its stages are represented in all parts of the world, and there is often a considerable time-lag between the first appearance of metal artefacts and a fully developed metal-working technology in an area. Until its formulation, however, there was no framework into which archaeological discoveries could be fitted, and it remains a convenient terminology.

- The Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood was founded in 1848 by seven young English artists and writers, the major figures being Holman Hunt, Sir John Millais, and Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Abhorring the slickness and sentimentality of much Victorian art, they aimed to reintroduce into their work the simplicity and sincerity of early Italian painting. Stylistically, their work is characterized by bright colours, strong boundary lines, and a meticulous attention to detail, while their subjects are often biblical or literary. Much criticized by the art Establishment, although defended by the English critic John Ruskin, the movement began to dissipate in the early 1850s. The name, however, continued to be used in association with the markedly different later pictures of Rossetti and the work of Sir Edward Burne-Jones and William Morris, which typically depict scenes from classical mythology or medieval romance in a dreamy style which has given rise to the association of the term with a kind of romantic escapism.

(See also PRESBYTERIANISM.) ● n. 1 a member of a Presbyterian Church. 2 an adherent of the Presbyterian system. [eccl.L presbyterium (as PRESBYTERY)]

Presbyterianism /ˌprezbɪˈtɪərɪəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. a form of Protestant church government by presbyters or elders. The system was first put forward during the Reformation by John Calvin, who in 1541 established the first Presbyterian government in Geneva. He believed his system to be based on the Bible and early Church; Christ alone was the head of the Church, and all other members were equal under him. Today Presbyterianism is followed by Reformed Churches in Europe, North America, and elsewhere, notably by the Church of Scotland, the only national Presbyterian Church. Government is by elected lay elders of equal rank as well as by ministers, in courts at local (congregational), regional, and national levels.

Priestley^1 /ˈpriːstlɪ/, J(ohn) B(oynton) (1894–1984), English novelist, dramatist, and critic. His first major success came with the picaresque novel The Good Companions (1929); this was followed by many other novels, including the more sombre Angel Pavement (1930). His plays include Time and the Conways (1937) and the mystery drama An Inspector Calls (1947). During and after the Second World War he was a popular radio broadcaster on current affairs.

Priestley^2 /ˈpriːstlɪ/, Joseph (1733–1804), English scientist and theologian. Priestley was the author of about 150 books, mostly theological or educational. His chief work was on the chemistry of gases, a number of which he managed to isolate, including ammonia, sulphur dioxide, nitrous oxide, and nitrogen dioxide. Priestley's most significant discovery was of 'dephlogisticated air' (oxygen) in 1774; he demonstrated that it was important to animal life, and that plants give off this gas in sunlight. In his theological writings he maintained a Unitarian position. His support of the French Revolution provoked so much hostility that he settled in America in 1794. (See also PHLOGISTON.)

▪ The primates evolved from tree-living shrewlike ancestors in the Cretaceous period. They are generally characterized by having a large brain, good binocular vision, and opposable thumbs. There are two suborders, of which the primitive Prosimii (prosimians) appeared in the Eocene, and the more advanced Anthropoidea (monkeys, apes, and humans) in the Oligocene. The latter are themselves divided into the platyrrhines (New World monkeys), which have widely spaced nostrils that face sideways, and the catarrhines (Old World monkeys, apes, and humans), which have the nostrils close together and facing downwards. Prime Minister n. (abbr. PM) the head of the executive branch of government in most countries with a parliamentary system. In Britain Robert Walpole is generally regarded as having been the first Prime Minister in the modern sense, although the term was then merely descriptive and unofficial, or even derogatory. It was little used in the later part of the 18th century, 'Premier' or 'First Minister' being used instead, but by the middle of the 19th century it had become common in informal use and began to creep into official use from 1878. In 1905 it was fully recognized and the precedence of the Prime Minister was defined by King Edward VII. In current use, the terms Premier and Prime Minister refer to the same office in Britain, but in Canada and Australia the government of a province or state is headed by a Premier, that of the federal government by a Prime Minister. In countries such as France, where the President has an executive function, the Prime Minister is in a subordinate position.

- Printing involves transferring an image, or group of images, from an original master to a receptive substrate such as paper, board, or cloth, repeating the process any number of times. It is most commonly achieved by inking a suitable form of the master image (i.e. printers' type, a rubber stamp, or litho plate) and transferring the ink to the substrate by flat or rolling pressure. The process originated in China in about the 8th century AD and spread to Europe in the 15th century. A major advance was Johann Gutenberg's invention in about 1450 of movable type, by which each letter is cast separately, allowing words and spaces to be formed into lines and pages, which in turn form relief master images for inking and impressing on to paper. This method has been largely superseded by photographic image-forming techniques and faster rotary printing. Film is now the most widely used master-image material, through which the printing surface is selectively sensitized and etched, ready for the modern rotary printing-press. Multicolour images are formed by superimposing one printed colour upon another in register. An increasingly common method of printing is that whereby master images are held by computer in digital form, and then put on to a suitable substrate by plotting, xerographic, ink-jet, or laser techniques.

- In medieval times and earlier imprisonment was not a mode of punishment but a means of holding offenders awaiting trial or execution; it was used also as a means of extorting money, through the holding of wealthy people to ransom. In Britain, the modern idea of prisons grew from the houses of correction used in the 16th century. By the mid-16th century such places (known as bridewells) were established in every county under the local justices, and came to be used for imprisoning petty offenders (those guilty of serious offences were generally punished by death, mutilation, and, later, by transportation); similar practices developed on the Continent. Insanitary surroundings, oppression, cruelty, and lack of supervision made prison conditions notoriously bad, and towards the end of the 18th century John Howard began a vigorous crusade for reform. Solitary confinement was at this time regarded as the ideal form of imprisonment, in the belief that the opportunity for contemplation it allowed would encourage penitence, and remained in favour until the late 19th century. In 1878 the government assumed control of all prisons, retaining it until the privatization of some institutions in the 1990s. By the 1960s and 1970s alternative methods of dealing with offenders, including suspended sentences, parole, and community service, were being introduced.

Privy Council n. a body of advisers appointed by a sovereign or Governor-General. In Britain, the Privy Council originated in the council of the Norman kings. This took two forms: a large council of the realm (which grew into the Parliament), and a select body of officials who met regularly with the sovereign to carry on everyday government, known from the 14th century as the Privy (= private) Council. In the 18th century the importance of the Cabinet, a smaller group drawn from the Privy Council, increased and the full Privy Council's functions became chiefly formal, except in certain judicial activities. It now consists of about 300 members, chosen by the sovereign from those who hold or have held high political, legal, or ecclesiastical office in the UK or Commonwealth. It is summoned as a body only to sign the proclamation of the accession of a new sovereign, and when a sovereign announces an intention to marry. □ Privy Counsellor (or Councillor) a private adviser, esp. a member of a Privy Council.

proportionalist /prə'pɔ:ʃənəlɪst/ n. an advocate of proportional representation.

proportional representation n. (abbr. PR) an electoral system in which parties gain seats in proportion to the number of votes cast for them. Whereas the 'first past the post' system, as used in Britain and North America, may assign authority to represent a whole constituency or country to a party that has won less than half of the votes cast, proportional representation gives minority parties a measure of representation commensurate with their support, and thus in this respect may be said to be more democratic. On the other hand, its use often means that no party wins a clear majority of seats, which can give substantial power to minority groups and lead to coalitions and to weak, unstable government. There are several kinds of electoral system based on PR, the most common being the single transferable vote system and voting on the basis of a party list. PR is in use throughout much of Europe.

- Proteins have many different functions. Some form strong fibres and make up the structural component of body tissues such as muscle, collagen, hair, nails, etc. Others with more compact molecules include most enzymes, antibodies, and receptors in cell membranes. Protein molecules are built up from about twenty amino acids which are arranged in different orders in one or more long polypeptide chains. Protein in the diet is broken down into amino acids, from which the body makes the proteins it requires. The information needed for the synthesis of particular proteins in a living cell comes from the DNA in the cell's nucleus.

- Protestants are so called after the declaration (protestatio) of Martin Luther and his supporters dissenting from the decision of the Diet of Spires (1529), which reaffirmed the edict of the Diet of Worms against the Reformation. All Protestants rejected the authority of the papacy, both religious and political, and found authority in the text of the Scriptures, made available to all in vernacular translation. The authority of the clergy and the sacramental system was weakened in varying degrees, and the way opened for religious individualism. In the 16th century the name was generally taken in Germany by the Lutherans, while the Swiss and French called themselves 'Reformed'. In England the use has varied with time and circumstances. In the 17th century 'Protestant' was generally accepted and used by members of the established Church, and sometimes excluded Presbyterians, Quakers, and Nonconformists; it was primarily opposed to 'papist'. It is now usually opposed to 'Roman Catholic' or 'Catholic'. In broader terms, the Protestant Churches encompass the Anglican Communion and the Baptists, Lutherans, Methodists, Pentecostalists, and Presbyterians, and have a total membership of about 300 million.

proton /'prəʊtɒn/ n. Physics a stable subatomic particle with a positive electric charge, occurring in all atomic nuclei. (See note below.) □ protonic /prə'tɒnɪk/ adj. [Gk, neut. of prōtos first: see -ON]

- Protons were identified by the German physicist Wilhelm Wien (1864–1928) in 1898 and by J. J. Thomson in 1910. The charge on the proton is equal and opposite to that on the electron, although the mass of the proton is 1,836 times greater. The atoms of each chemical element have a characteristic number of protons in the nucleus; this is known as the atomic number. The common isotope of hydrogen has a nucleus consisting of a single proton. The transfer of protons between molecules is an important chemical reaction; such reactions in water are the basis of acid-base chemistry and of metabolism in living systems. High-velocity protons are used in particle accelerators to probe the structure of atomic nuclei. (See also PROUT.)

- Protoplasm consists of the nucleus and other specialized structures together with the complex, translucent, membrane-bound material (cytoplasm) in which they are embedded. In the 19th century protoplasm was thought of as a basic, essentially homogeneous, form of living matter. With the recognition, especially after the invention of the electron microscope, of the complex structural organization within cells, this concept of protoplasm as a distinct substance was gradually abandoned.

- First observed by Antoni van Leeuwenhoek in the 17th century, protozoans are ubiquitous in aquatic and damp habitats. There are also numerous parasitic species, among them the trypanosomes which cause sleeping sickness, and the malaria parasite. Protozoans display a great variety of form, and among the most important groups are the flagellates, ciliates, and amoebas. Some protozoans, esp. foraminifers, bear shells, the residue of which forms a significant proportion of some limestone rocks. The protozoans are now usually assigned to the kingdom Protista, along with the unicellular algae and fungi.

Proudhon /ˈpruːdon/, Pierre Joseph (1809–65), French social philosopher and journalist. His criticism of Napoleon III (Louis-Napoleon) and the Second Republic led to his imprisonment 1849–52; he later spent a period (1858–62) in exile in Belgium. His writings exercised considerable influence on the development of anarchism and socialism in Europe. He is chiefly remembered for his pamphlet What is Property? (1840), arguing that property, in the sense of the exploitation of one person's labour by another, is theft. His theories were developed by his disciple Bakunin.

Proust^{1} /pruːst/, Joseph Louis (1754–1826), French analytical chemist. He is remembered mainly for proposing the law of constant proportions, demonstrating that any pure sample of a chemical compound (such as an oxide of a metal) always contains the same elements in fixed proportions. Berzelius later established the connection between this and John Dalton's atomic theory, giving Proust full credit, though some exceptions to the law were found many years later.

Proust^{2} /pruːst/, Marcel (1871–1922), French novelist, essayist, and critic. Although he moved in fashionable Paris society during the 1890s, he was severely incapacitated by asthma and became a virtual recluse after his mother's death in 1905. He devoted the remainder of his life to writing his novel À la recherche du temps perdu (published in seven sections between 1913 and 1927). Influenced by the philosophy of Henri Bergson, the work traces the life of the narrator from childhood to middle age; its central theme is the recovery of the lost past and the releasing of its creative energies through the stimulation of unconscious memory.

Prout /praʊt/, William (1785–1850), English chemist and biochemist. He was trained as a physician, and carried out analyses of urine, gastric juices, and foodstuffs. In theoretical chemistry he developed the hypothesis that hydrogen is the primary substance from which all other elements are formed, and if the atomic weight of hydrogen is regarded as unity the weights of all other elements are exact multiples of it. Although this hypothesis was later found to be incorrect, it stimulated research in atomic theory, and in modern particle physics the hydrogen nucleus (proton) is indeed considered a fundamental particle.

- Provençal is a Romance language closely related to French, Italian, and Catalan. Strictly speaking, it is just one dialect within langue d'oc (or Occitan), although it is sometimes used as a synonym for it. In the 12th–14th centuries it was the language of the troubadours and cultured speakers of southern France, but the subsequent spread of the northern dialects of French led to its gradual decline in prestige and importance. Its use as a literary language was revived in the 19th century, and a spoken form, now regarded as a dialect, is still widely used in Provence.

Prussia /'prʌʃə/ a former kingdom of Germany, which grew from a small country on the south-eastern shores of the Baltic to an extensive domain covering much of modern NE Germany and Poland. Its nucleus was a forested area east of the Vistula, originally inhabited by a Baltic people and taken in the 13th century by the Teutonic Knights. In the 16th century Prussia became a duchy of the Hohenzollerns, passing in 1618 to the electors of Brandenburg. The kingdom of Prussia, proclaimed in 1701, with its capital at Berlin, grew in the 18th century under Frederick the Great to become a major European power. After victory in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870–1, Prussia under Wilhelm I became the centre of the new German Empire created by Bismarck. With Germany's defeat in the First World War, the Prussian monarchy was abolished and Prussia's supremacy came to an end. (See also EAST PRUSSIA.)

Ptolemy^{1} /'tolɪmɪ/ the name of all the Macedonian kings of Egypt, a dynasty founded by Ptolemy, the close friend and general of Alexander the Great, who took charge of Egypt after the latter's death and declared himself king (Ptolemy I) in 304 BC. The dynasty ended with the death of Cleopatra in 30 BC. Under the Ptolemies their capital, Alexandria, became a leading commercial and cultural centre of the Greek world. (See also HELLENISTIC.)

Ptolemy^{2} /'tolɪmɪ/ (2nd century) Greek astronomer and geographer. His major work, known by its Arabic title (Almagest), was a textbook of astronomy based on the geocentric system of Hipparchus. Ptolemy's teachings had enormous influence on medieval thought, the geocentric view of the cosmos being adopted as Christian doctrine until the late Renaissance. The Almagest included detailed tables of lunar and solar motion with eclipse predictions, and a catalogue giving the positions and magnitudes of 1,022 stars. Ptolemy's Geography, giving lists of places with their longitudes and latitudes, was also a standard work for centuries, despite its inaccuracies.

public school n. 1 Brit. a private fee-paying secondary school, esp. for boarders. (See note below.) 2 N. Amer., Austral., & Sc. etc. a non-fee-paying school.

- In England, public schools had their origin in some of the grammar schools of the Tudor period or earlier, carried on under some kind of public management or control, which gained sufficient reputation to attract boys living far away as residential pupils; they were contrasted with 'private schools', which were run for the profit of their proprietors, and with education at home under a tutor. In the 19th century there was a surge of expansion, as well-to-do members of the middle class sought for their sons the education that they had not had themselves, and of reform: it was during this period that the traditional public school ethos, of classical education, public service, and character-building sports, arose. Public schools are now rather more similar in nature to state schools, although often having a wider curriculum and smaller classes. Among the foremost are Winchester (founded in 1382), Eton (1440), Shrewsbury (1552), Westminster (1560), Rugby (1567), Harrow (1571), and Charterhouse (1611); Benenden (1923) and Roedean (1885) are exclusively for girls.

publishing /ˈpʌblɪʃɪŋ/ n. the production and issuing of books, magazines, newspapers, and other material for sale. Before the invention of printing, texts were often disseminated by being read aloud to an audience. In the early days of printing the printer was also publisher and bookseller, but during the 15th and 16th centuries these functions began to separate and eventually develop into separate trades. Technological developments in the printing industry in the 19th century dramatically increased output and reduced prices. In the 20th century the introduction of paperbacks, pioneered in the Penguin series in 1935, tapped a wider market by offering books at an unprecedentedly low price, and after the Second World War social and economic changes, and the spread of higher and further education, resulted in an increased demand for books of all kinds. The advent of computers has changed many aspects of publishing in a technological revolution as important as the invention of printing: more titles are now published than ever before, with consequently fiercer competition; specialist books and magazines are produced to cater for every interest, sometimes by means of desktop publishing; and reference books and other works are increasingly available in electronic form, on disk rather than paper.

Puccini /pʊˈtʃiːnɪ/, Giacomo (1858–1924), Italian composer. He established his reputation with his third opera, Manon Lescaut (1893). Puccini's sense of the dramatic, gift for melody, and skilful use of the orchestra have ensured that his works remain among the most popular in the repertoire. Several others followed, including La Bohème (1896), Tosca (1900), Madama Butterfly (1904), and Turandot, which was completed by a pupil after his death and produced in 1926.

- Puppetry as a form of theatre is probably as old as the theatre itself. There are glove or hand puppets, puppets worked by rods, marionettes operated by strings, and the flat puppets used in the shadow theatre of Java, Bali, and Thailand. Famous hand puppets include the English Punch, the French Guignol, and the Italian Pulcinella. In Europe puppets were at their most popular in the 17th and 18th centuries, when special theatres were built for often satirical shows; Haydn wrote an operetta, Dido (*c.*1776), for puppets. Since then puppetry in the West has been associated more with children's entertainment, although television has revived the use of puppets in satire. The popularity of puppets is now highest in the Far East and eastern Europe.

Purcell /pɜːˈsel, ˈpɜːs(ə)l/, Henry (1659–95), English composer. He enjoyed royal patronage and was organist for Westminster Abbey (1679–95) and the Chapel Royal (1682–95). He composed many choral odes and songs for royal occasions as well as sacred anthems for the Chapel Royal. His main interest was in music for the theatre; he composed the first English opera, Dido and Aeneas (1689), moving away from the tradition of the masque, breaking new dramatic ground and accommodating a wide emotional range. He also composed the incidental music for many plays, while his instrumental music includes a series of Fantasias for the viol (1680).

> ▪ The Puritans were Protestants who, dissatisfied with the elements of Catholicism retained by the Elizabethan religious settlement, sought a further purification of the Church from supposedly unscriptural forms. At first they tried to rid the Church of ornaments, vestments, organs, etc.; from 1570 the more extreme attacked the institution of episcopacy itself, wishing to substitute government by Church elders (Presbyterianism). Oppressed under James I and Charles I, in particular by Archbishop Laud, many (such as the Pilgrim Fathers) emigrated to the Netherlands and America. The Civil War of the 1640s led to the temporary pre-eminence of Puritanism. Soon, however, the movement fragmented into sects, and the term Puritan began to be less used; after the Restoration such people tended to be called Dissenters or Nonconformists.

Pushkin /ˈpʊʃkɪn/, Aleksandr (Sergeevich) (1799–1837), Russian poet, novelist, and dramatist. His revolutionary beliefs and atheistic writings led to his dismissal from the civil service and eventual internal exile; he was rehabilitated in 1826 after the accession of Nicholas I. A leading figure in Russian literature, he wrote prolifically in many genres; his first success was the romantic narrative poem Ruslan and Ludmilla (1820). Other notable works include the verse novel Eugene Onegin (1833), and the blank-verse historical drama Boris Godunov (1831). He was fatally wounded in a duel with his wife's admirer.

- The pyramid is the characteristic form of tomb built for Egyptian pharaohs from the 3rd dynasty (*c.*2649 BC) until *c.*1640 BC. There are two principal types: the step pyramid, consisting of several stepped levels rising to a flat top, and the true pyramid, which developed from this and was introduced in the 4th dynasty (*c.*2575 BC, e.g. at Giza). The pyramid was the focal point of a vast funerary complex, including a temple at its side, linked by a causeway to a lower temple near the cultivated land and flood-waters of the river. The exact building procedure, and the mathematical calculations involved, have not been fully explained. The pyramids are imposing in their austere simplicity; those at Giza were one of the Seven Wonders of the World. Monuments of similar shape are associated with the civilizations of Meso-America and South America *c.*1200 BC–AD 750. They were built by the Aztecs and Mayas as centres of worship, usually as part of a complex of courtyards, platforms, and temples.

Pyramus /ˈpɪrəməs/ Rom. Mythol. a Babylonian youth, lover of Thisbe. Forbidden to marry by their parents, who were neighbours, the lovers conversed through a chink in a wall and agreed to meet at a tomb outside the city. There, Thisbe was frightened away by a lioness coming from its kill, and Pyramus, seeing her bloodstained cloak and supposing her dead, stabbed himself. Thisbe, finding his body when she returned, threw herself upon his sword. Their blood stained a mulberry-tree, whose fruit has ever since been black when ripe, in sign of mourning for them. The story, known from Ovid, also features in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream.

▪ Central to the Quakers' belief is the doctrine of the 'Inner Light', or sense of Christ's direct working in the soul; this has led them to reject all set forms and trappings of worship. They have no priests or ministers, and their meetings begin in silence until some member feels stirred to speak. They were formerly much persecuted, but refused to meet in secret and marked themselves out by plainness of dress and by distinctive forms of speech; many early Quakers emigrated to found new communities, for example, the new colony of Pennsylvania, established in 1682. In the 20th century, refusal of military service as combatants and of oaths brought Quakers into conflict with the authorities. Originally derogatory, the name may have arisen from Fox's direction to his opponents to 'quake at the word of the Lord', or from the fits allegedly experienced by worshippers.

Quant /kwont/, Mary (b.1934), English fashion designer. She was a principal creator of the '1960s look', launching the miniskirt in 1966 and promoting bold colours and geometric designs. She was one of the first to design for the ready-to-wear market, and her styles, created especially for the young, did much to make London a leading fashion centre at the time. Since the 1970s she has concentrated on marketing a range of cosmetics.

quantum /'kwontəm/ n. (pl. quanta /-tə/) 1 Physics a a discrete quantity of energy proportional in magnitude to the frequency of the radiation it represents. b an analogous discrete amount of any other physical quantity. (See note below.) 2 a a required or allowed amount. b a share or portion. □ quantum chromodynamics see CHROMODYNAMICS. quantum jump (or leap) 1 a sudden large increase or advance. 2 Physics an abrupt transition in an atom or molecule from one quantum state to another. quantum-mechanical of or relating to quantum mechanics. quantum mechanics a mathematical form of quantum theory dealing with the motion and interaction of (esp. subatomic) particles and incorporating the concept that these particles can also be regarded as waves. quantum number a number expressing the value of some property of a particle occurring in quanta. quantum state an energy state of an atom, molecule, etc. described by a particular set of quantum numbers. quantum theory the body of theory based on the existence of quanta of energy. [L, neut. of quantus how much]

- In 1900 Max Planck accounted for certain puzzling characteristics of the electromagnetic radiation given off by hot bodies by postulating that energy did not form a continuous spectrum but was emitted only in fixed amounts or 'quanta' (see also PLANCK). The absorption and emission of discrete quanta of energy by atoms and molecules resulted in the characteristic features visible in the spectra of substances. However, this radical idea also had a more revolutionary effect on understanding of the physical world. Einstein suggested that all electromagnetic radiation, including light, could be regarded as consisting of particles or quanta of energy (photons). In 1913 Niels Bohr proposed a model of the atom that incorporated quantum theory, by supposing that electrons circle around a central nucleus in orbits corresponding to particular amounts of energy. In 1924 Louis-Victor de Broglie conjectured that, just as light waves possess some attributes of particles, perhaps particles such as electrons could have some of the properties of waves. This idea was incorporated by Schrödinger, Heisenberg, and others into a more sophisticated theory of atomic structure called quantum mechanics, in which Bohr's orbits are replaced by more diffuse orbitals, reflecting the dual properties of the electron as a wave and a particle. The principles of relativity theory were incorporated into quantum mechanics by Paul Dirac in 1928. Since then, despite its paradoxical and counter-intuitive aspects, quantum theory has been extremely successful in describing many physical phenomena, including the properties of the atomic nucleus and subatomic particles, and of electromagnetic fields.

quarantine /'kworənˌtiːn/ n. & v. ● n. 1 isolation imposed on persons or animals that have arrived from elsewhere or been exposed to, and might spread, infectious or contagious disease. 2 the period of this isolation. ● v.tr. impose such isolation on, put in quarantine. [It. quarantina forty days f. quaranta forty] quark[1] /kwoːk/ n. Physics a hypothetical particle carrying a fractional electric charge, postulated as a building block of other subatomic particles. The hadrons are thought to be built up from combinations of quarks; three kinds of quark were originally proposed but this number has risen to account for properties such as strangeness and charm. Although quarks have not been experimentally observed (it may be theoretically impossible for them to occur in the free state), many predictions of quark theory have been corroborated by experiments. Quebec /kwɪ'bek/ (French Québec /kebɛk/) 1 a heavily forested province in eastern Canada; pop. (1991) 6,845,700. Originally inhabited by the Algonquin and Cree peoples, it was settled by the French in 1608, ceded to the British in 1763, and became one of the original four provinces in the Dominion of Canada in 1867. The majority of its residents are French-speaking and its culture remains predominantly French. It has a certain amount of political independence from the rest of Canada, and is a focal point of the French-Canadian nationalist movement, which advocates independence for Quebec. 2 (also Quebec City) its capital city, a port on the St Lawrence River; pop. (1991) 574,400. Founded on the site of a Huron village by Samuel de Champlain in 1608, it is Canada's oldest city. It was a centre of the struggle between the French and the British for control of colonial North America and was captured from the French by a British force in 1759 after the battle of the Plains of Abraham. It became capital of Lower Canada (later Quebec) in 1791. □ Quebecker n. (also Quebecer).

Queen^1 /kwiːn/, Ellery (pseudonym of Frederic Dannay, 1905–82, and Manfred Lee, 1905–71), American writers of detective fiction. Their many detective novels, featuring the detective also called Ellery Queen, include The French Powder Mystery (1930). They went on to found and edit Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine (1941).

Queen^2 /kwiːn/ a British rock group formed in 1971, featuring flamboyant vocalist Freddie Mercury (born Frederick Bulsara, 1946–91) and guitarist Brian May (b.1947). Queen initially played heavy rock but soon added dramatic, almost operatic, elements, as exemplified by the hugely successful 'Bohemian Rhapsody' (1975). The group was effectively disbanded after Freddie Mercury died of Aids in 1991.

[F f. It. razza, of unkn. orig.]

▪ Although ideas of race are centuries old, it was not until the 19th century, with the growth of interest in ethnology and physical anthropology, that attempts to systematize racial divisions were made. It was then generally believed that most individuals could be assigned unambiguously to a racial group, and that such groupings could account not only for discernible physical characteristics but also for cultural and social differences between geographically distinct peoples. Although this notion of race as a rigid construct has now been abandoned, some of the terms used in the classification (such as Caucasian, Mongoloid, and Negroid), outlined by early 19th-century anthropologists such as Blumenbach, are still in use. Ideas of supposed racial superiority and social Darwinism put forward by writers such as Gobineau and Nietzsche reached their culmination in Nazi ideology of the 1930s and gave pseudo-scientific justification to policies and attitudes of discrimination, segregation, exploitation, and slavery. Such theories of race, in particular those asserting a link between racial type and intelligence, are now discredited; scientifically it is accepted as obvious that there are subdivisions of the human species, but it is also clear that genetic variation between individuals of the same race can be as great as that between members of different races, and that racial characteristics which might once have been distinctive have, with few exceptions, been complicated and obscured by long histories of interbreeding.

racemose /ˈræsɪˌməʊz, -ˌməʊs/ adj. 1 Bot. in the form of a raceme. 2 Anat. (of a gland etc.) clustered. [L racemosus (as RACEME)] racer /ˈreɪsə(r)/ n. 1 a horse, yacht, bicycle, etc., of a kind used for racing. 2 a circular horizontal rail along which the traversing-platform of a heavy gun moves. 3 a person or thing that races.

racetrack /ˈreɪstræk/ n. 1 = RACECOURSE. 2 a track for motor-racing.

raceway /ˈreɪsweɪ/ n. 1 a track or channel along which something runs, esp.: a a channel for water. b a groove in which ball-bearings run. c a pipe or tubing enclosing electrical wires. 2 esp. US a a track on which trotting-races are held. b a racecourse.

rachis /ˈreɪkɪs/ n. (pl. rachides /ˈrækɪˌdiːz, ˈreɪk-/) 1 Bot. a a stem of grass etc. bearing flower-stalks at short intervals. b the axis of a compound leaf or frond. 2 Anat. the vertebral column or the cord from which it develops. 3 Zool. a feather-shaft, esp. the part bearing the barbs. □ rachidial /rəˈkɪdɪəl/ adj. [mod.L f. Gk rhakhis spine: the pl. -ides is erron.]

rachitis /rəˈkaɪtɪs/ n. rickets. □ rachitic /-ˈkɪtɪk/ adj. [mod.L f. Gk rhakhitis (as RACHIS)]

Rachmaninov /rækˈmænɪˌnɒf/, Sergei (Vasilevich) (1873–1943), Russian composer and pianist, resident in the US from 1917. Rachmaninov belongs to the Russian romantic tradition, and was particularly influenced by Tchaikovsky. He was a celebrated pianist and is primarily known for his compositions for piano, in particular the Prelude in C sharp minor (1892), the Second Piano Concerto (1901), and the Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini (1934) for piano and orchestra. He also wrote three other piano concertos, as well as three symphonies and three operas.

Rachmanism /ˈrækməˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. exploitation or intimidation of a tenant by an unscrupulous landlord. It is named after a London landlord, Peter Rachman (1919–62), whose practices became notorious in the early 1960s.

racial /ˈreɪʃ(ə)l/ adj. 1 of or concerning race (racial diversities; racial minority). 2 on the grounds of or connected with difference in race (racial discrimination; racial tension). □ racially adv.

racialism /ˈreɪʃəˌlɪz(ə)m/ n. = RACISM 1. □ racialist n. & adj.

Racine /ræˈsiːn/, Jean (1639–99), French dramatist. The principal tragedian of the French classical period, he drew on many different sources, including Greek and Roman literature (Andromaque, 1667; Iphigénie, 1674; Phèdre, 1677) and the Bible (Athalie, 1691). Central to the majority of his tragedies is a perception of the blind folly of human passion, continually enslaved to the pursuit of its object and destined always to be unsatisfied. Like his contemporary Corneille he wrote within the constraints of the rules governing tragic composition (see TRAGEDY).

racism /ˈreɪsɪz(ə)m/ n. 1 a a belief in the superiority of a particular race; prejudice based on this. b antagonism towards other races, esp. as a result of this. 2 the theory that human abilities etc. are determined by race. □ racist n. & adj.

rack^1 /ræk/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a a framework, usu. with rails, bars, hooks, etc., for holding or storing things. b a frame for holding animal fodder. 2 a cogged or toothed bar or rail engaging with a wheel or pinion etc., or using pegs to adjust the position of something. 3 a hist. an instrument of torture stretching the victim's joints by the turning of rollers to which the wrists and ankles were tied. b a cause of suffering or anguish. ● v.tr. (also wrack) 1 (of disease or pain) inflict suffering on. 2 hist. torture (a person) on the rack. 3 place in or on a rack. 4 shake violently. 5 injure by straining. 6 oppress (tenants) by exacting excessive rent. 7 exhaust (the land) by excessive use. □ on the rack suffering intense distress or strain. rack one's brains make a great mental effort (racked my brains for something to say). rack-railway a railway with a cogged rail between the bearing rails, esp. used for ascending steep slopes. rack-rent n. 1 a high rent, annually equalling the full value of the property to which it relates. 2 an extortionate rent. ● v.tr. exact this from (a tenant) or for (land). rack-renter a tenant paying or a landlord exacting an extortionate rent. rack up N. Amer. accumulate or achieve (a score etc.). rack-wheel a cog-wheel. [ME rakke f. MDu., MLG rak, rek, prob. f. recken stretch]

rack^2 /ræk/ n. destruction (esp. rack and ruin). [var. of WRACK^1, WRECK] rack^3 /ræk/ n. a joint of lamb etc. including the front ribs. [perh. f. RACK^1] rack^4 /ræk/ v.tr. (often foll. by off) draw off (wine, beer, etc.) from the lees. [ME f. Prov. arracar f. raca stems and husks of grapes, dregs] rack^5 /ræk/ n. & v. ● n. driving clouds. ● v.intr. (of clouds) be driven before the wind. [ME, prob. of Scand. orig.: cf. Norw. and Sw. dial. rak wreckage etc. f. reka drive] rack^6 /ræk/ n. & v. ● n. a horse's gait between a trot and a canter. ● v.intr. progress in this way.

racket^1 /ˈrækɪt/ n. (also racquet) 1 a bat with a round or oval frame strung with catgut, nylon, etc., used in tennis, squash, etc. 2 a snow shoe resembling a racket. □ racket-tail a South American hummingbird, Loddigesia mirabilis, with a racket-shaped tail. [F racquette f. It. racchetta f. Arab. rāḥa palm of the hand]

racket² /'rækɪt/ n. 1 a a disturbance; an uproar; a din. b social excitement; gaiety. 2 colloq. a a scheme for obtaining money or attaining other ends by fraudulent and often violent means. b a dodge; a sly game. 3 colloq. an activity; a way of life; a line of business (starting up a new racket). □ rackety adj. [16th c.: perh. imit.]

racketeer /ˌrækɪ'tɪə(r)/ n. a person who operates a dishonest business. □ racketeering n.

rackets /'rækɪts/ n.pl. (treated as sing.) a ball game for two or four persons played with rackets in a plain four-walled court. Rackets is the forerunner of many racket and ball games, notably squash. Now a minority sport, it is distinguished from squash in particular by the use of a solid, harder ball. The game as it is played today developed in England in the 19th century, but its origins may be traced to medieval times; until the first indoor courts were built in the mid-19th century it was played in open courts in the backyards of inns and taverns.

racon /'reɪkɒn/ n. esp. US a radar beacon that can be identified and located by its response to a radar signal from a ship etc. [*ra*dar + bea*con*] raconteur /ˌrækɒn'tɜ:(r)/ n. (fem. raconteuse /-'tɜ:z/) a teller of anecdotes. [F f. raconter relate, RECOUNT] racoon var. of RACCOON.

racquet var. of RACKET¹.

racy /'reɪsɪ/ adj. (racier, raciest) 1 lively and vigorous in style. 2 risqué, suggestive. 3 having characteristic qualities in a high degree (a racy flavour). □ racily adv. raciness n. [RACE² + -Y¹]

rad¹ /ræd/ n. (pl. same) radian. [abbr.]

rad² /ræd/ n. sl. a political radical. [abbr.]

rad³ /ræd/ n. Physics a unit of absorbed dose of ionizing radiation, corresponding to the absorption of 0.01 joule per kilogram of absorbing material. [*r*adiation *a*bsorbed *d*ose] rad⁴ /ræd/ adj. esp. US sl. fine, excellent, outstanding. [perh. abbr. RADICAL]

RADA /'rɑ:də/ abbr. (in the UK) Royal Academy of Dramatic Art.

radar /'reɪdɑ:(r)/ n. 1 a system for determining the direction, range, or presence of (usu. moving) objects, by sending out pulses of high-frequency radio waves and detecting the returning echo. (See note below.) 2 the apparatus used for this. □ radar trap the use of radar to detect vehicles exceeding a speed limit. [*ra*dio *d*etection *a*nd *r*anging]

- The principle of radar was established in 1886, when Heinrich Hertz showed that radio waves could be reflected from solid objects. However, it remained chiefly theoretical until 1922, when Marconi suggested that radio echoes could be used to detect ships in bad visibility, and the idea was tested experimentally in the US. Radar systems for air and sea navigation and for detecting enemy aircraft and ships were developed in Britain, France, Germany, and the US in the 1930s, and used by both sides in the Second World War. Many systems now use secondary radar, in which the target automatically transmits a return signal when it receives a scanning signal.

RADC abbr. (in the UK) Royal Army Dental Corps.

Radcliffe /'rædklɪf/, Mrs Ann (1764–1823), English novelist. She was a leading exponent of the Gothic novel and was influential on the work of other writers, including Byron, Shelley, and Charlotte Brontë. Her five novels include The Mysteries of Udolpho (1794) and The Italian (1797).

raddle /'ræd(ə)l/ n. & v. ● n. red ochre (often used to mark sheep). ● v.tr. 1 colour with raddle or too much rouge. 2 (as raddled adj.) worn out; untidy, unkempt. [var. of RUDDLE]

Radha /'rɑ:dɑ:/ Hinduism the favourite mistress of the god Krishna, and an incarnation of Lakshmi. In devotional religion she represents the longing of the human soul for God. [Skr., = prosperity]

Radhakrishnan /ˌrɑ:də'krɪʃnən/, Sir Sarvepalli (1888–1975), Indian philosopher and statesman, President 1962–7. A teacher of philosophy at Mysore, Calcutta, and Oxford universities, he introduced some of the main ideas of classical Indian philosophy to the West. Major works include Indian Philosophy (1923–7) and Eastern Religions and Western Thought (1939). Radhakrishnan was Indian ambassador to the Soviet Union (1949–52) before returning to India in 1952 to become Vice-President under Nehru; he was elected President ten years later.

radial /'reɪdɪəl/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of, concerning, or in rays. 2 a arranged like rays or radii; having the position or direction of a radius. b having spokes or radiating lines. c acting or moving along lines diverging from a centre. 3 Anat. relating to the radius (radial artery). 4 (in full radial-ply) (of a vehicle tyre) having the core fabric layers arranged radially at right angles to the circumference and the tread strengthened. ● n. 1 Anat. the radial nerve or artery. 2 a radial-ply tyre. □ radial engine an engine having cylinders arranged along radii. radial keratotomy Med. see KERATOTOMY. radial symmetry symmetry occurring about any number of lines or planes passing through the centre of an organism etc. radial velocity esp. Astron. the speed of motion along a radial line, esp. between a star etc. and an observer. □ radially adv. [med.L radialis (as RADIUS)] radian /'reɪdɪən/ n. Geom. the SI unit of angle (symbol rad), equal to the angle subtended at the centre of a circle by an arc equal in length to the radius. One radian equals about 57.3°. [RADIUS + -AN] radiant /'reɪdɪənt/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 emitting rays of light. 2 (of eyes or looks) beaming with joy or hope or love. 3 (of beauty) splendid or dazzling. 4 (of light) issuing in rays. 5 operating radially. 6 extending radially; radiating. ● n. 1 the point or object from which light or heat radiates, esp. in an electric or gas heater. 2 Astron. a radiant point. □ radiant heat heat transmitted by radiation, not by conduction or convection. radiant heater a heater that works by this method. radiant point 1 a point from which rays or radii proceed. 2 Astron. the apparent focal point of a meteor shower. □ radiance n. radiancy n. radiantly adv. [ME f. L radiare (as RADIUS)]

radiate v. & adj. ● v. /'reɪdɪˌeɪt/ 1 intr. a emit rays of light, heat, or other electromagnetic waves. b (of light or heat) be emitted in rays. 2 tr. emit (light, heat, or sound) from a centre. 3 tr. transmit or demonstrate (life, love, joy, etc.) (radiates happiness). 4 intr. & tr. diverge or cause to diverge or spread from a centre. 5 tr. (as radiated adj.) with parts arranged in rays. ● adj. /'reɪdɪət/ having divergent rays or parts radially arranged. □ radiately /-dɪətlɪ/ adv. radiative /-dɪətɪv/ adj. [L radiare radiat- (as RADIUS)]

radiation /ˌreɪdɪ'eɪʃ(ə)n/ n. 1 the act or an instance of radiating; the process of being radiated. 2 Physics a the emission of energy as electromagnetic waves or as moving particles. b the energy transmitted in this way, esp. invisibly. 3 (in full radiation therapy) treatment of cancer and other diseases using radiation, such as X-rays or ultraviolet light. □ radiation chemistry the study of the chemical effects of radiation on matter. radiation sickness sickness caused by exposure to radiation, such as X-rays or gamma rays. □ radiational adj. radiationally adv. [L radiatio (as RADIATE)] radiator /'reɪdɪˌeɪtə(r)/ n. 1 a person or thing that radiates. 2 a a device for heating a room etc., consisting of a metal case through which hot water or steam circulates. b a usu. portable oil or electric heater resembling this. 3 an engine-cooling device in a motor vehicle or aircraft with a large surface for cooling circulating water. □ radiator grille a grille at the front of a motor vehicle allowing air to circulate to the radiator.

radical /'rædɪk(ə)l/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 of the root or roots; fundamental (a radical error). 2 far-reaching; thorough; going to the root (radical change). 3 a advocating thorough reform; holding extreme political views; left-wing, revolutionary. b (of a measure etc.) advanced by or according to principles of this kind. 4 forming the basis; primary (the radical idea). 5 Math. of the root of a number or quantity. 6 (of surgery etc.) seeking to ensure the removal of all diseased tissue. 7 of the roots of words. 8 Mus. belonging to the root of a chord. 9 Bot. of, or springing direct from, the root. 10 hist. belonging to an extreme section of the Liberal Party. 11 US hist. seeking extreme anti-South action at the time of the Civil War. 12 sl. excellent, outstanding, cool. ● n. 1 a person holding radical views or belonging to a radical party. 2 Chem. a a free radical. b an element or atom or a group of these normally forming part of a compound and remaining unaltered during the compound's ordinary chemical changes. 3 a the root of a word. b any of the basic set of around 214 Chinese characters from which more complex ones are mainly derived. 4 a fundamental principle; a basis. 5 Math. a a quantity forming or expressed as the root of another. b a radical sign. □ radical chic the fashionable affectation of radical left-wing views or of dress, lifestyle, etc., associated with such views. radical sign $\sqrt{}$, $\sqrt{}^3$, etc., indicating the square, cube, etc., root of the number following. □ radicalism n. radically adv. radicalness n. radicalize v.tr. & intr. (also -ise). radicalization /ˌrædɪkəlaɪ'zeɪʃ(ə)n/ n. [ME f. radicchio /rə'di:kɪˌəʊ/ n. (pl. -os) a variety of chicory with dark red-coloured leaves. [It., = chicory]

radices pl. of RADIX.

radicle /'rædɪk(ə)l/ n. 1 the part of a plant embryo that develops into the primary root; a rootlet. 2 a rootlike subdivision of a nerve or vein. □ radicular /rə'dɪkjʊlə(r)/ adj. [L radicula (as RADIX)]

radio /'reɪdɪəʊ/ n. & v. ● n. (pl. -os) 1 (often attrib.) a the transmission and reception of sound messages etc. by electromagnetic waves of radio frequency, without a connecting wire (cf. WIRELESS). (See note below.) b an apparatus for receiving, broadcasting, or transmitting radio signals. c a message sent or received by radio. 2 a sound broadcasting in general (prefers the radio). b a broadcasting station or channel (Radio One). ● v. (-oes, -oed) 1 tr. a send (a message) by radio. b send a message to (a person) by radio. 2 intr. communicate or broadcast by radio. □ radio cab (or car) a cab or car equipped with a two-way radio. radio fix the position of an aircraft, ship, etc., found by radio. radio frequency the frequency band of telecommunication, ranging from 10^4–10^{11} or 10^{12} Hz. radio galaxy Astron. a galaxy emitting radiation in the radio-frequency range of the electromagnetic spectrum. radio ham see HAM n. 4. [short for radio-telegraphy etc.]

- Marconi in 1901 was the first to use invisible electromagnetic waves, described theoretically by Maxwell and experimentally confirmed by Hertz, for the transmission of signals. Marconi's early transmissions were really telegraphic signals; the first transmissions of sound messages were by R. A. Fessenden in 1906. By 1921 scheduled radio programmes were being broadcast in the US; the BBC was transmitting in the UK by 1923, and by 1925 there were 600 stations worldwide. As the number of users has increased, higher frequencies (including microwaves) have been exploited. Two methods are in regular use for carrying information by radio: amplitude modulation, first used by Fessenden, and frequency modulation, developed by W. H. Armstrong in the 1930s.

radio- /ˈreɪdɪəʊ/ comb. form 1 denoting radio or broadcasting. 2 a connected with radioactivity. b denoting artificially prepared radioisotopes of elements (radio-caesium). 3 connected with rays or radiation. 4 Anat. belonging to the radius in conjunction with some other part (radio-carpal). [RADIUS + -O- or f. RADIO] radioactive /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈæktɪv/ adj. of or exhibiting radioactivity. □ radioactively adv.

radioactivity /ˌreɪdɪəʊækˈtɪvɪtɪ/ n. 1 the spontaneous disintegration of atomic nuclei, with the emission of usu. penetrating radiation or particles. (See note below.) 2 radioactive substances, or the radiation emitted by these.

- Radioactivity was discovered in 1896 by Becquerel, who found that uranium salt crystals affected a photographic emulsion. Studies by Rutherford and others showed that there are three main types of radiation emitted by radioactive substances: alpha particles (helium nuclei), beta particles (fast-moving electrons), and gamma rays (high-energy electromagnetic radiation). Naturally occurring radioactive elements such as uranium and thorium are a major source of heat in the earth's interior and of background radiation on the surface. Radioactivity is also released in nuclear explosions and in the waste products of nuclear reactors, and severe damage can be caused to living tissue by dosages which significantly exceed the natural background radiation. (See also HALF-LIFE.)

radio-assay /ˌreɪdɪəʊəˈseɪ/ n. an analysis of a substance based on radiation from a sample.

radio astronomy n. the branch of astronomy concerned with radio emissions from celestial objects. Such emission originates within the Galaxy from ionized gas, supernova remnants, and objects such as pulsars, and is also emitted by remote radio galaxies, quasars, and black holes, where poorly understood processes release large amounts of energy. The discovery in 1965 of a uniform background of radiation pervading the universe at microwave wavelengths is now believed to be a direct observation of the remnant of radiation from the big bang. (See RADIO TELESCOPE.)

radiobiology /ˌreɪdɪəʊbaɪˈɒlədʒɪ/ n. the biology concerned with the effects of radiation on organisms and the application in biology of radiological techniques. □ radiobiologist n. radiobiological /-ˌbaɪəˈlɒdʒɪk(ə)l/ adj. radiobiologically adv.

radiocarbon /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈkɑːb(ə)n/ n. a radioactive isotope of carbon with an atomic mass of 14. Radiocarbon has been used since the late 1940s in a technique of assigning absolute dates to ancient organic material. All living things absorb carbon, either from the carbon dioxide in the atmosphere or by eating plants etc. that contain it. Once they are dead, the proportion of carbon-14 in their remains falls at a steady rate (the half-life of carbon-14 is about 5,568 years), and by measuring its concentration the approximate date of death of the specimen can be calculated. The amount of carbon-14 in the atmosphere, however, has not remained constant throughout time, and radiocarbon dates require adjustment, e.g. by calibration against the precise dates derived from dendrochronology.

radiochemistry /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈkemɪstrɪ/ n. the chemistry of radioactive materials. □ radiochemical adj. radiochemist n.

radio-controlled /ˌreɪdɪəʊkənˈtrəʊld/ adj. (of a model aircraft etc.) controlled from a distance by radio.

radio-element /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈelɪmənt/ n. a natural or artificial radioactive element or isotope.

radiogenic /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈdʒenɪk/ adj. 1 produced by radioactivity. 2 suitable for broadcasting by radio. □ radiogenically adv.

radio-goniometer /ˌreɪdɪəʊˌgəʊnɪˈɒmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for finding direction using radio waves.

radiogram /ˈreɪdɪəʊˌgræm/ n. 1 Brit. a combined radio and record-player. 2 a picture obtained by X-rays, gamma rays, etc. 3 a radio-telegram. [RADIO- + -GRAM, GRAMOPHONE] radiograph /ˈreɪdɪəʊˌgrɑːf/ n. & v. ● n. 1 an instrument recording the intensity of radiation. 2 = RADIOGRAM 2. ● v.tr. obtain a picture of by X-ray, gamma ray, etc. □ radiographer /ˌreɪdɪˈɒgrəfə(r)/ n. radiography n. radiographic /-dɪəˈgræfɪk/ adj. radiographically adv.

radioimmunology /ˌreɪdɪəʊˌɪmjʊˈnɒlədʒɪ/ n. the application of radiological techniques in immunology.

radioisotope /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈaɪsəˌtəʊp/ n. a radioactive isotope. □ radioisotopic /-ˌaɪsəˈtɒpɪk/ adj. radioisotopically adv.

radiolarian /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈleərɪən/ n. Zool. a marine protozoan of the superclass Actinopoda, having a siliceous skeleton with projecting spines and radiating rodlike pseudopodia. [mod.L Radiolaria former order name, f. L radiolus dimin. of RADIUS] radiology /ˌreɪdɪˈɒlədʒɪ/ n. the scientific study of X-rays and other high-energy radiation, esp. as used in medicine. □ radiologist n. radiologic /-dɪəˈlɒdʒɪk/ adj. radiological adj.

radiometer /ˌreɪdɪˈɒmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for measuring the intensity or force of radiation, invented by William Crookes in 1875. □ radiometry n.

radiometric /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈmetrɪk/ adj. of or relating to the measurement of radioactivity. □ radiometric dating a method of dating geological specimens by determining the relative proportions of the isotopes of a radioactive element present in a sample.

radionics /ˌreɪdɪˈɒnɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the study and interpretation of radiation believed to be emitted from substances, esp. as a form of diagnosis. [RADIO- + -onics, after ELECTRONICS] radionuclide /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈnjuːklaɪd/ n. a radioactive nuclide.

radiopaque /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈpeɪk/ adj. (also radio-opaque /ˌreɪdɪəʊəʊˈpeɪk/) opaque to X-rays or similar radiation. □ radiopacity /-ˈpæsɪtɪ/ n. [RADIO- + OPAQUE] radiophonic /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈfɒnɪk/ adj. of or relating to synthetic sound, esp. music, produced electronically.

radioscopy /ˌreɪdɪˈɒskəpɪ/ n. the examination by X-rays etc. of objects opaque to light. □ radioscopic /-dɪəˈskɒpɪk/ adj.

radiosonde /ˈreɪdɪəʊˌsɒnd/ n. a miniature radio transmitter broadcasting information about pressure, temperature, etc., from various levels of the atmosphere, carried esp. by balloon. [RADIO- + G Sonde probe] radio-telegram /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈtelɪˌgræm/ n. a telegram sent by radio, usu. from a ship to land.

radio-telegraphy /ˌreɪdɪəʊtɪˈlegrəfɪ/ n. telegraphy using radio transmission. □ radio-telegraph /-ˈtelɪˌgrɑːf/ n.

radio-telephony /ˌreɪdɪəʊtɪˈlefənɪ/ n. telephony using radio transmission. □ radio-telephone /-ˈtelɪˌfəʊn/ n. radio-telephonic /-ˌtelɪˈfɒnɪk/ adj.

radio telescope n. an instrument used to detect radio emissions from the sky, whether from natural celestial objects or from artificial satellites. Most familiar are large dish antennae such as the steerable reflector at Jodrell Bank, near Manchester, UK, but telescopes may also be constructed as linear arrays of aerials. Greater resolution is obtained by electronically linking signals from widely separated antennae, which then operate as an interferometer. Radio signals from outside the earth's atmosphere were first detected in 1932 by Karl Jansky (1905–50), and five years later his fellow American Grote Reber (b.1911) built the first parabolic reflector to collect and focus radio waves.

radiotelex /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈteleks/ n. a telex sent usu. from a ship to land.

radiotherapy /ˌreɪdɪəʊˈθerəpɪ/ n. the treatment of cancer and other diseases by X-rays or other forms of radiation. □ radiotherapist n. radiotherapeutic /-ˌθerəˈpjuːtɪk/ adj.

radish /ˈrædɪʃ/ n. 1 a cruciferous plant, Raphanus sativus, with a fleshy pungent root. 2 this root, eaten esp. raw in salads etc. [OE rædic f. L radix radicis root] radium /ˈreɪdɪəm/ n. a radioactive metallic chemical element (atomic number 88; symbol Ra). (See note below.) □ radium emanation = RADON. radium therapy the treatment of disease by the use of gamma radiation from radium. [L radius ray]

- Radium was discovered in the mineral pitchblende in 1898 by Pierre and Marie Curie. It is the most reactive member of the alkaline earth metals. It is rare in nature, occurring chiefly as an impurity in uranium ores. Because of its radioactive properties it was formerly used extensively in the treatment of tumours and in luminous materials, but it has now been largely replaced by other substances for these purposes.

radius /ˈreɪdɪəs/ n. & v. ● n. (pl. radii /-dɪˌaɪ/ or radiuses) 1 Math. a a straight line from the centre to the circumference of a circle or sphere. b a radial line from the focus to any point of a curve. c the length of the radius of a circle etc. 2 a usu. specified distance from a centre in all directions (within a radius of 20 miles; has a large radius of action). 3 a the thicker and shorter of the two bones in the human forearm (cf. - Tracks of wooden rails were used in Europe from the 16th century for horse-drawn loads in mines and collieries, iron rails appearing in England in 1738. A breakthrough came in 1804 in Britain with the construction of the first steam locomotive by Richard Trevithick, and the first railway company, the Stockton and Darlington, opened in England in 1825. Following the success of George Stephenson's Rocket in 1830, the railways expanded rapidly, particularly in Britain and the US, and their development played a large part in the growing industrial power of the West in the 19th century. In the second half of the 20th century steam locomotives mainly gave way to diesel and electric traction; many busy routes (including all underground railways) are now electrified, using either overhead wires or an insulated third rail. Today, speeds of 225 kilometres an hour (140 m.p.h.) are routinely reached on some electrified main lines. Steam power persists in some countries and is often the focus of an active preservation movement in countries where it is no longer in ordinary use, such as the UK and US. The expansion of road transport (and later, especially in the US, air transport) has led to a decline in the importance of rail transport and the closure of many lines, though increasing road congestion has recently led some countries to consider the re-expansion of their railways.

rainforest /ˈreɪnfɒrɪst/ n. luxuriant forest in an area of heavy rainfall and little seasonality. Rainforest is typical of many tropical regions but temperate rainforest occurs in moist coastal areas, e.g. in the north-western US, western Canada, and eastern Australia. Tropical evergreen rainforest has been stable for millions of years and is the richest of all vegetation types in terms of the numbers of plant and animal species; it has a high proportion of lianas, epiphytes, and very tall trees. Rainforests are important in removing excess carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and as a reservoir of water. However, because almost all the nutrients are held in the vegetation rather than the soil, removal of the plant cover quickly leads to impoverished soils that are easily eroded. There is currently much concern over the rate at which such forests are being irreversibly destroyed (see DEFORESTATION).

Ramsay[1] /ˈræmzɪ/, Allan (1713–84), Scottish portrait painter. From the late 1730s he was based in London, where he became much in demand as a portraitist in the 1750s. His style is noted for its French rococo grace and sensitivity, particularly in his portraits of women; major works of this period include The Artist's Wife (1755). In 1767 he was appointed painter to George III.

Ramsay[2] /ˈræmzɪ/, Sir William (1852–1916), Scottish chemist, discoverer of the noble gases. Investigating why laboratory-prepared nitrogen was less dense than that isolated from air, he decided that the latter must be contaminated. He went on to discover five chemically inert gases — argon, helium, and (with the help of M. W. Travers, 1872–1961) neon, krypton, and xenon — and determined their places in the periodic table. In 1910, with Frederick Soddy and Sir Robert Whytlaw-Gray (1877–1958), he identified the last noble gas, radon. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1904.

Rawls /rɔːlz/, John (b.1921), American philosopher. He is the author of A Theory of Justice (1972), which invokes the philosophical concept of social contract and attacks the utilitarian doctrine of subjugating individual needs to the more pressing claims of the general good, arguing for principles to be formulated that guarantee basic liberties.

Ray^1 /reɪ/, John (1627–1705), English naturalist. His principal interest was botany, and his major work was the three-volume Historia Plantarum (1686–1704). He toured Europe with F. Willoughby (1635–72) in search of specimens of flora and fauna. Ray was the first to classify flowering plants into monocotyledons and dicotyledons, he established the species as the basic taxonomic unit, and his systematic scheme was not improved upon until that of Linnaeus. The Ray Society of London is named in his honour.

Ray^2 /reɪ/, Man (born Emmanuel Rudnitsky) (1890–1976), American photographer, painter, and film-maker. He helped to found the New York Dada movement, before moving to Paris in 1921 and becoming a leading figure in the European Dada and surrealist movements. Ray pioneered the photogram or 'rayograph', placing objects on sensitized paper and exposing them to light; he later applied the technique to film-making. He is perhaps best known for his photograph the Violin d'Ingres (1924), which achieved the effect of making the back of a female nude resemble a violin.

Ray^3 /raɪ/, Satyajit (1921–92), Indian film director. His first film, Pather Panchali (1955), won a prize at Cannes and brought Indian films to the attention of Western audiences. Filmed in neo-realist style and set in his native Bengal, it formed part of a trilogy completed by Aparijito (1956) and Apur Sansar (1959). His other films include Kanchenjunga (1962), for which he also wrote the music, and The Home and the World (1984).

Rayleigh /'reɪlɪ/, John William Strutt, 3rd Baron (1842–1919), English physicist. He published a major work on acoustics, The Theory of Sound, and carried out pioneering work on atmospheric airglow and black-body radiation. He was director of the Cavendish Laboratory after Maxwell, his researches including the establishment of electrical units of resistance, current, and electromotive force. He worked with William Ramsay from 1894, and their accurate measurement of the constituents of the atmosphere led to the discovery of argon and other inert gases. In 1904 Rayleigh was awarded the Nobel Prize for physics.

Reagan /'reɪgən/, Ronald (Wilson) (b.1911), American Republican statesman, 40th President of the US 1981–9. He was a Hollywood actor before entering politics and becoming governor of California (1966–74). In 1981, at the age of 69, he became the oldest-ever President of the US. During his presidency military expenditure was increased, the Strategic Defense Initiative was launched, taxes and spending on social services were reduced, and the national budget deficit rose to record levels. His interventionist policy in Central America led to the Irangate scandal of 1987. Reagan held several summit meetings with President Gorbachev towards the end of his term of office, resulting in an intermediate nuclear forces non-proliferation treaty signed in 1987.

realism /ˈrɪəlɪz(ə)m/ n. (usu. opp. IDEALISM) 1 the practice of regarding things in their true nature and dealing with them as they are; practical views and policy. 2 (also Realism) in art, fidelity of representation, truth to nature, and insistence on details; the showing of life as it is without glossing over what is ugly or painful. (See note below.) 3 Philos. a the theory that abstract entities or universals have an objective existence (cf. NOMINALISM, CONCEPTUALISM). (See note below.) b belief that matter as an object of perception has real existence and is not dependent on the existence of mental states or minds (cf. IDEALISM). □ realist n. & adj.

- While realism in art is often used in the same contexts as naturalism, implying a concern to depict or describe accurately and objectively, it also suggests a deliberate rejection of conventionally beautiful or appropriate subjects in favour of sincerity and a focus on simple and unidealized treatment of contemporary life. Specifically, the term is applied to a late 19th-century movement in French painting and literature represented by Gustave Courbet in the former and Balzac, Stendhal, and Flaubert in the latter; in this context a deliberate concern with social issues is often implied, in which case the term social realism is sometimes used. (See also NEO-REALISM, SOCIALIST REALISM.)
- The theory that universals have their own reality is sometimes called Platonic realism because it was first outlined by Plato's doctrine of 'forms' or ideas. It is sometimes justified by the observation that people automatically recognize ordinary objects as being members of a more generalized class; according to the theory these classes or universals exist separately in another world.

real tennis n. a game played by two or four persons in a walled court, the forerunner of modern lawn tennis. A net divides the court into equal but dissimilar halves: the service side, from which service is always delivered, and the hazard side, on which service is received. A small solid ball is struck with rackets over the net, or rebounds from the side walls. The scoring system is similar to that used in lawn tennis. A similar game was played in monastery cloisters in the 11th century, at first with a bare (or gloved) hand. The game's popularity declined partly because of the need for special courts, and partly because of the rise of lawn tennis and other forms of racket games; today it is very much a minority sport. Reed^{2} /riːd/, Walter (1851–1902), American physician. He worked mainly in the US Army Medical Corps, and finally headed the Yellow Fever Board (1900–1), based in Cuba. His group proved that the disease was transmitted by the mosquito Aedes aegypti, and then showed that the agent responsible was a virus – the first to be recognized as the cause of a human disease. The mosquito's breeding places were successfully attacked, and a vaccine was developed some years later.

re-formation /ˌri:fɔ:'meɪʃ(ə)n/ n. the process or an instance of forming or being formed again.

Reformation, the the 16th-century movement to reform the doctrine and practices of the Roman Catholic Church, which resulted in the establishment of the Protestant Churches. The roots of the Reformation go back to the 14th century with groups such as the Lollards and the Hussites attacking the Church for its wealth and hierarchical structure, and stressing the need to return to the simplicity and asceticism of the Scriptures; the movement was also fuelled by the work of humanists such as Erasmus. The Reformation is usually thought of as beginning in 1517 in Wittenberg when Martin Luther issued ninety-five theses criticizing the sale of indulgences, and launched an attack on papal infallibility, the celibacy of the priesthood, the doctrine of transubstantiation, and corruption within religious orders. Luther confirmed his commitment to reform at the Diet of Worms in 1521. In Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Saxony, Hesse, and Brandenburg, supporters broke away and established Protestant Churches, while in Switzerland a separate movement was led by Zwingli and later Calvin. Calvinism spread to France, Germany, the Netherlands, Scotland, and the US. (See also PROTESTANT.) □ Reformational adj.

refrigerator /rɪˈfrɪdʒəˌreɪtə(r)/ n. an appliance or room in which food etc. is refrigerated. Ice houses, pits, or cellars were known in ancient Mesopotamia, Greece, and Rome, using ice collected in winter, and the principle continued in use up to the 19th century. By the 1880s refrigerating machines were being used in ships, transporting meat successfully on long sea journeys. The first mechanically operated domestic refrigerator was developed *c.*1880 from the cooling apparatus used by the brewing industry, powered by a small steam pump; electric refrigerators appeared in the 1920s. A modern refrigerator makes use of the cooling effect produced when a liquid is made to evaporate: the liquid (often a fluorine compound) is pumped through a valve that causes it to expand and become a vapour, which is then made to condense back to a liquid and give up its heat outside the refrigerator.

relativistic /ˌrelətɪˈvɪstɪk/ adj. Physics (of phenomena etc.) accurately described only by the theory of relativity. □ relativistically adv.

relativity /ˌreləˈtɪvɪtɪ/ n. 1 the fact or state of being relative. 2 Physics the dependence of observations on the relative motion of the observer and the observed object; the branch of physics that deals with the description of space and time allowing for this. (See note below.)

▪ The concept of relativity arose from late 19th-century efforts to produce a coherent theory of electromagnetism. The chief architect was Einstein, who published his special theory of relativity in 1905. Einstein rejected the idea of a stationary 'ether' pervading space, and abandoned notions of absolute space and time as a common framework of reference for all bodies in the universe, instead placing great importance on distinguishing systematically between the viewpoint or framework of the observer and that of the object or process being observed. Fundamental principles of the theory are that the measured velocity of light is the same for all observers, whatever their mutual velocities, and that the mathematical form of the laws of physics which apply to moving objects or systems is independent of the motion of the framework of the observer, provided the latter motion is uniform. Among the theory's consequences (consistent with experimental results) are the following: nothing can go faster than the speed of light in a vacuum; the mass of a body increases and its length (in the direction of motion) shortens as its speed increases; the time interval between two events occurring in a moving body appears greater to a stationary observer; and mass and energy are equivalent and interconvertible. Einstein's general theory of relativity, published in 1915, extended this to accelerated motion and gravitation, which was treated as a curvature of the space–time continuum. It predicted that light rays would be deflected, and shifted in wavelength, when passing through a substantial gravitational field, effects which have been experimentally confirmed.

Rembrandt /ˈrembrænt/ (full name Rembrandt Harmensz van Rijn) (1606–69), Dutch painter. After working at first in his native Leiden, he moved to Amsterdam, where he made his name as a portrait painter with the Anatomy Lesson of Dr Tulp (1632), a strongly lit group portrait in the manner of Caravaggio. With his most celebrated painting, the Night Watch (1642), he used chiaroscuro to give his subjects a more spiritual and introspective quality, a departure which was to transform the Dutch portrait tradition. Rembrandt is especially identified with the series of over sixty self-portraits painted from 1629 to 1669, a sustained exercise in self-analysis. His prolific output also included many religious, genre, and landscape paintings, drawings, and etchings. Although his name remained well known after his death, it was not until the romantic period that Rembrandt was recognized as a supreme artist.

▪ The Renaissance is generally regarded as beginning in Florence in the early 14th century, where humanist ideas were arising and there was a revival of interest in classical antiquity with its associations of naturalism and fidelity to nature. Important early figures are the writers Petrarch, Dante, and Boccaccio and the painter Giotto. Classical techniques and styles were studied in Rome by the sculptor Donatello as well as by the architects Bramante and Brunelleschi, who worked on the theory of perspective, which was developed in the innovative frescos and paintings of Masaccio. The period from the end of the 15th century has become known as the High Renaissance, when Venice and Rome began to share Florence's importance and Botticelli, Cellini, Raphael, and particularly Leonardo da Vinci and Michelangelo were active. The latter two are the foremost examples of the 'Renaissance man', the ideal figure of the period, versed in all aspects of art and learning. The ideas of the Renaissance did not begin to spread beyond Italy until the early 16th century, but were then important throughout western Europe for the next hundred years, influencing, among others, Dürer, Erasmus, Montaigne, Cervantes, and Shakespeare. From the art of the Italian High Renaissance developed mannerism.

▪ As non-renewable natural resources such as fossil and nuclear fuels are being depleted, increasing efforts are being made to make more use of renewable resources. There are various ways of generating electricity or obtaining heat from natural sources of energy, depending on local climate and topography. Hydroelectric power now accounts for nearly a fifth of the world's electricity. However, other schemes — wind generators, solar and geothermal energy, and tidal power — are still of only local importance, and wave power has yet to be economically proven. Renewable natural materials such as wood, vegetable matter, and manure can be used directly for heating and cooking, or they can be processed into solid, liquid, or gaseous fuels such as biogas, sometimes yielding fertilizers as a by-product.

▪ Reptiles, which first appeared in the Carboniferous period, evolved from amphibians but differ from them in several important respects. They breathe air all their lives, they have a waterproof scaly skin, their eggs have waterproof shells, and the newly hatched young resemble their parents. There are now about 6,000 species, but there were many more in the Mesozoic era (284–65 million years ago), when life on earth was dominated by flying and swimming reptiles as well as by dinosaurs. However, many of these may not fit easily into the traditional concept of a reptile: they may, for example, have been warm-blooded.

Repton /ˈreptən/, Humphry (1752–1818), English landscape gardener. Repton's reconstructions of estates often used regular bedding and straight paths close to the house, but his parks were carefully informal after the model of Capability Brown. Important designs include the park at Cobham in Kent (*c.*1789–*c.*1793) and the house and grounds at Sheringham Hall in Norfolk (1812).

Republican Party one of the two main US political parties (the other being the Democratic Party). It was formed in 1854 in support of the anti-slavery movement preceding the Civil War; Abraham Lincoln was the first of its leaders to become President. Its political stance is more right-wing than that of the Democratic Party, favouring limited central government and tough, interventionist foreign policy; it tends to appeal to white, middle-class voters, traditionally in the north and west.

Republic Day the day on which the foundation of a republic is commemorated; (in India) 26 Jan.

(after RESTORE) of restauration, ME f. OF restauration or LL restauratio (as RESTORE)]

Restoration, the 1 the re-establishment of the Stuart monarchy in England with the return of Charles II to the throne in 1660. After the death of Oliver Cromwell in 1658, his son Richard (1626–1712) proved incapable of maintaining the Protectorate, and, there appearing to be no other viable form of government, a faction led by General Monck organized the king's return from exile. 2 the restoration of the Bourbon monarchy in France in 1814, following the fall of Napoleon. Louis XVIII, who had been king in title since 1795, was recalled from exile and installed on the throne by Talleyrand; he reigned until 1824, with an interruption of 100 days when Napoleon briefly returned to power in 1815.

Restoration comedy n. a style of drama which flourished in London after the Restoration in 1660. Restoration comedies were generally sexual intrigues marked by wit, cynicism, and licentiousness, often with highly complicated plots featuring such standard characters as foppish noblemen, scheming servants, and sexually rapacious young widows. Principal exponents include William Congreve, William Wycherley, George Farquhar, Sir John Vanbrugh, and Aphra Behn. The genre marked the first appearance of women, most notably Nell Gwynn, on stage in Britain.
